MIDDLE GROUND IN THE VIVISECTION CONTROVERSY.

Extremists Giving Way to Program of Reasonable Regulation In Place of Attempts to Prohibit the Practice.

In connection with the widespread discussion of the vivisection problem the fact is pointed out that both here and abroad extreme views have culminated not in absolute prohibition, but in reasonable regulation of the practice. For many years England has had a law regulating vivisection, which was brought about by agitation that originally would have been satisfied by nothing less than prohibitive measures.

In Pennsylvania and Massachusetts there have existed for a long time societies whose object was to secure legislation against vivisection. In both states the leaders of the anti-vivisection movement have now apparently become convinced that regulation rather than prohibition is the practical solution of the problem of how to protect animals, while at the same time securing to science ample liberty to carry out useful and humane investigations.

In New York the Anti-vivisection society has announced that it will oppose the Davis-Lee bill (proposed by the Society For the Prevention of Abuse In Animal Experimentation), which would throw around the practice of vivisection such safeguards as are necessary to prevent useless and unnecessarily cruel work without interfering with investigations aimed to extend useful medical knowledge.

The Davis-Lee bill, however, has received a large measure of support from the press, the general public and a considerable number of physicians, some 700 of whom have signed a petition asking for the enactment of the bill, although the State Medical society is officially opposed to it.

As between the position of the extremists, who would stop vivisection entirely, and the scientific enthusiasts, who do not want any regulation whatever, the Davis-Lee bill appears to afford a middle ground upon which reasonable people of all views can meet, and a strong effort is being made to secure its passage at this session of the New York legislature.

GOOD ROADS ADVOCATES OPPOSE HIGH TARIFF.

Want Asphalt, Now Required to Protect Country Roads From Automobile Wear, Put Back on Free List.

Organizations and individuals working for the good roads cause are now centering their efforts against the attempt to secure a higher duty on asphalt. All the expert testimony laid before the subcommittee on tariff revision of the ways and means committee is in favor of returning crude asphalt to the free list and fixing the duty on refined asphalt in accordance with the difference in the cost of production in the United States as compared with the foreign product.

It is pointed out that a higher duty will amount simply to increased taxation for streets and roads, both on new construction and maintenance.

Outside of the cities the opposition to an increase in the tariff on asphalt is due to the fact that all the good roads experts are agreed that the only way in which a durable highway can be made that will withstand modern motor traffic is to use asphalt as a cementing material to hold together the surface of macadam roads. State and county authorities understand this fact thoroughly, as does the great organization of farmers known as the National grange, which takes a very active interest in road matters.

A strong effort is being made to show congress that good as well as cheap roads are a far more important consideration than the protection of asphalt produced in the far west, which cannot possibly benefit states east of the Mississippi owing to the great cost of transportation across the continent.

NEW LINEN MILLS EARN DIVIDEND IN FIRST YEAR.

Quick Success of Industry Makes It Necessary to Extend Plant In Order to Meet Demand For First "Linen Made In America."

Breaking all records in New England mill history, the Oxford Linen mills of North Brookfield, Mass., have in their first year of operation been placed on a profit making basis. After only eight months of operation under its new process of linen making the mill has established trade connections throughout the country so favorable that the surplus earnings make it possible to pay a dividend for the quarter ending March 31.

Business has so increased that the present mill capacity is not equal to the immediate demand, and plans have been made for extensive additions to the plant as soon as the weather permits building to begin. Extensive water rights have been acquired with a view to using electricity generated by water power.

The advantage enjoyed by the Oxford mills is that its combined chemical and mechanical processes accomplish in twelve hours what it takes European peasants and mill workers sixteen weeks to perform—that is, convert flax straw or tow into a perfect linen fiber ready for spinning.

So great an economy of time now makes it possible for America to compete with Great Britain, Belgium or France in the manufacture of fine linen in spite of cheap labor abroad. The enormous duty on imported linen is entirely avoided, to the additional advantage of linens made here.
