Maryland Primary Voters May Name Second Choice Man For Gov.

Four Candidates In Field Complicate Election

First Case Since Three-Cornered Fight Of 1922

Ballot counting and election mathematics such as have not been used in Maryland in a dozen years may have to be employed in September to determine the winner of the primary fights for both major parties in the event more than two candidates for each post remain in the battle to the last.

If each of the candidates for Gov. ernor, for example, takes his issues to the voters at the primaries, the electorate will be given an opportunity to mark first and second choices on the ballots.

Not since the three-cornered Democratic Senatorial primary of 1922, when William Cabell Bruce, William I. Norris and David J. Lewis were candidates, has there been the need for voters to mark second-choice candidate standard-bearer.

The method to be used if the occasion arises was explained this week by Willis R. Jones, Deputy Attorney General, as follows:

Each county and district in the city will select a first and second choice candidates whose name the delegates will take to the convention.

If a candidate receives a majority over all other candidates, he is "first choice" candidate. In case there is a plurality and not a majority, the candidate receiving the lowest number of "first choice" votes is dropped.

After the low man is dropped the ballots tallied for him for "first choice" are distributed among the remaining candidates according to the way his voters have indicated their "second choice." This process of dropping the low man and distributing his "second choice" votes continues until one candidate has a majority.

After the "first choice" candidate for the county or city district has been determined, the "second choice" candidate is named. This is done by dropping from consideration the "first choice" candidate. Then there is added to the "first choice" votes of each of the remaining candidates the "second choice" votes of those voting for the candidate polling a majority over all for "first choice."

If none of the remaining candidates for "second choice" has a majority over the rest of the field, the low man is dropped and his votes distributed among the other candidates, until one gains a majority.

At the convention, which must be held not later than five weeks prior to the general election, the delegates from the county and city districts vote for their "first choice" candidate on the first ballot. In case no one receives a majority, the low man is dropped and the delegates who voted for him as "first choice" cast their second ballot for their "second choice" candidate.

Only after the "first" and "second choice" candidates have been dropped may delegates vote without instruction.

To date four Democrats have announced as Gubernatorial candidates. They are Governor Ritchie, Mayor Jackson, George L. Radcliffe, and Dr. Charles H. Conley. On the Republican ticket the present avowed candidates include H. Webster Smith, Harry W. Nice, Harry Phoebusbus and Walter E. Quensedt.

High School Grads Asked To Register

May Be Means Of Finding Positions

The graduates of the Chestertown High School who have completed their commercial course or any others who are trying to find a niche for themselves in the business world are invited to register at the National Reemployment Office in the Chamber of Commerce building.

Two county women were placed through this office in good positions last week and one the week before. While there are no calls just at the present time they are likely to come quite unexpectedly.

Government budgets do not, for the time being, provide for clerical help in the office in spite of the fact that consolidation of five counties with the District Office in Chestertown has increased the amount of clerical work. Between personal interviews and the general work of the office the staff of three endeavors to handle its own typing.

There is an opportunity however for any person who uses a typewriter accurately to volunteer and serve occasionally for the experience.

During the past year in Kent at least two Normal School graduates gave their services without charge to the County Board of Education. In the middle of the winter one of those volunteers was called to a Western Shore teaching position and the other has been assigned to a County School for the coming term. Their credits stood them in good stead and they were well rewarded for giving their time. The same system may be used by any ambitious typist—girl or boy—and should lead to a position more quickly. There can, of course, be no guarantee. Volunteers may call Chestertown 115 and date themselves for certain times in the week. The office is open from 9 to 5 daily except Saturday when it closes at noon and applications for positions may be made within those hours. Staff members are Mrs. Nell C. Westcott, Chestertown; E. O. Willis of Queen Anne County; and Oren Harrison of Talbot County all of whom were in the work in their respective counties before the offices were combined.

O LIFE

By Alice Mathews

Never , never life you seem
To bring that which we would hold:
Always seeking, thus we dream
Joy O surely will unfold
Our desires: Alas, known grief
Dew drops every lotus-leaf.

Running swiftly hours pass by,
And we sense we shall be sad
When we're old, and then we sigh—
As we dream of joys we've had!
Seems the body a hotel
Where a short while mortals dwell.

Where is Home? For this world's bars
Are like iron,—prisoners we.
Evenings gaze, we at the Stars
Wishing—wishing we were free.
Tell me Life, how far you go—
Thereby hangs a tale we'd know!

NOTES ON SPORTS

Coming under the category of sports is the film which has been booked by "Roxy" Russell, golfer and movie impresario, for a showing at his New Lyceum Theatre, Wednesday and Thursday, July 11 and 12. The picture in question is the official fight reels of the Baer-Carnera Championship Heavyweight bout, in which the California knocked into the Italian behemoth's head the truth of Mussolini's argument, "Italy for Italians."

These pictures show the fight in the Madison Square Garden Bowl round for round, even better than you would have been able to view it sitting somewhere up in the heavens in the seats you could afford to buy for the bout. The use of telescope lenses practically brings the ring into your lap, and you will almost feel the punches that Carnera took on the scnnozzle.

Capt. Floyd Brown, back in Chestertown for a vacation from his duties in the Marine Corps, tells of an interesting situation at the golf courses in Shanghai, China. Out there in the Far East, where labor is the cheapest, each golfer has two caddies, one to carry the bag and the other to go ahead and spot the ball. The fore caddy, as the ball-spotter is called, sticks a flag alongside the ball, and then goes on to watch for the next shot. The cost of these two caddies for an eighteen-hole round is something like six cents!

And still they roll right along! We are still speaking of the Chester River golfers, of course...Sunday, with Easton as the opponent, the locals turned in a 20½ to 3½ victory, and need but to defeat Easton down there to once again clinch the title.

The score of the Sunday match, however, belies the closeness of the individual games. The locals won, but it was a tough struggle in practically every foursome.

It looks as though rowboat and tub races will be included on the program of water sports, to be staged during the Chester River Regatta. And we hope that some wise youngster will be all primed for the contests by getting the knack of tub tricks beforehand.

Two such different pastimes as football and bridge are holding the spotlight of beach popularity these sweltering days...The more energetic romp about the beach with the pigskin until hot and tired, then take a dip and taper off their day with a rubber of bridge...Others, like myself, are satisfied to swim and sleep...Then, swim and sleep again.

—o—

Many, many people are in favor of the Outboard motorboat Derby which is to be staged from Crumpton, particularly those housewives who live along the waterfront... They have a forlorn hope that some of the water-bugs will be stranded in the mud flats above Chestertown, or maybe they'll run up Morgan Creek by mistake.

—o—

The boxing show staged at Betterton last week was handicapped by lack of a convenient place to put it on. Presented on the dance floor of the Betterton Casino, it was impossible to elevate the ring and only those in front could view the punches...It should be possible to find an out-door site at the upper bay resort, and, with one, the bouts should draw...if good matches are offered.

—o—

It is distasteful to use tragedy as an example, but tragedy brings out sharp and clear lessons that should hove been learned in order to prevent catastrophies. The drowning of two youngsters on Fairlee creek last week should be sufficient warning to all parents to see that their children LEARN TO SWIM! And it should also bear tragic witness to the error of allowing children who do not swim to meddle about boats.

Nine times out of ten, it is not the treachery of the water which causes such accidents, but it is laid directly to the stupidity of parents, who carelessly sanction their offspring's desire to be on and in the water when they know that they can't swim. When you are burned with fire you live to be burned again; but water accidents, regretfully, bring tragedy with the lesson learned.

FIRST DROWNING OCCURS IN QUEEN ANNE'S

Queen Anne's county's first drowning accident of the season occurred early Saturday morning when Joseph Fooks, 16-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. William Fooks, of Grasonville, was found dead in Jackson's Creek. He was subject to vertigo and is believed to have suffered an attack and fell across the side of the boat, his head submerged in the water. He had borrowed the boat to go fishing. His body was found by Kenneth Horney and Ralph Ireland, both of Grasonville, who were fishing in Chester River.
