80-CENT CORN

Eighty-cent corn became an actually this week for the growers of Kent county when offers at that price, were made by local buyers for the new crop, which will be moved shortly to market. This is the first time for some years the grain has sold at these rates. In ciew of large yields on the majority of tillages it is estimated the revenue from the crop will approximate many thousands dollars. Some farmer are predicting yields of from fifty to sixty bushels per acre.

The initial price for last year's crop was forty and fifty cents per bushel.

DO YOU RECALL - - - ?

WHEN we had no window or door screens and the flies and other insects went in and out of the house at their pleasure? We remember an effort was made to keep them off the dining room table when meals were in progress by a revolving fan that was wound up and would run for a certain length of time. Another method was to have a small negro boy or girl walk around the table waving a bunch of peacock feathers.

WHEN the house now occupied by Wm. H. Cooper, on High street, near Kent, was erected and owned by a Mrs. Barrett, who conducted a store there for many years, the clerk being Wm. Anthony, a brother of the late Capt. Jack Anthony. She also had a son, John W. Carroll, who achieved quite a reputation as an actor in New York, and on one or two occasions gave an exhibition of his talent here in Chestertown, in the old Town Hall.

WHEN there were a good many pensioners of the Civil War in Chestertown and vicinity, but now so far as we know, there is but one left—Mr. Henry Stewart, who lives a short distance over the bridge, in Queen Anne's county. This old veteran is 93 years of age and a remarkably well preserved man. It is said that some time ago a dog was making raids on his poultry house. and he lay in wait for him with his gun. Seeing something moving in that vicinity, and his eyesight not being as good as it once was, he blazed away and killed one of his own pigs!

WHEN there was no such thing known as evaporated fruit. but it was all dried in the sun. The fruit was cut in small pieces, placed on receptables and there put out to dry. It was generally covered with mosquito netting, to protect it from the flies and insects.

WHEN an old gentlemen of the town was standing in a bar room here on one occasion and was about to spend his last ten cents for a drink. Just at this moment one of his children came in and told him they had no bread at house and asked for ten cents to buy a loaf. The old man looked at the child and then at the glass of whiskey on the bar, and finally said: "Well, they say that bread is the staff of life, but even so whiskey is life itself," and swallowed his dram.

WHEN an amusing story is told of a former well-known oysterman of Quaker Neck, who often visited the town for the sale of those bivalves. On one of his visits here it is said he inbibed a little too freely of the "cup that cheers" and on the return journey at night being in rather a dazed condition, went out Cross street instead of Princess. At that time the depot had not been moved to its present site and the street was shut off by a fence. He was naturally very much astonished at this and stayed there all night firmly convinced that since coming to town in the morning the Quaker Neck road had been fenced off!
