THE METROPOLIS OF CANADA

A Sunday In Montreal—Churches Of Wonderful Mangificence Ard Cost —A Reverent Regard For The Sabbath—Its Pretty Mt. Royal.

No. 4.

We reach Montreal about 10 P. M. and soon find comfortable rooms at the St. James Hotel, one and a-half blocks from the big Canadian & Pacific Windsor depot. It is a custom here to give names other than that of the railroad to all the big stations. We are awakened by a jabber and commingling of voices in the hotel corridors that told us we were not in America! We could not understand a word of it and when we asked the watchlady (for the women are employed at everything) she left us in a hurry and came with one who could speak English. We soon learned that over one-half the population of Montreal are French, one-fifth Irish and only one-seventh English. The Scotch have a large share in the enterprise and business of Montreal although but one-seventeenth of the population.

Before we start on our sight-seeing a few facts as to the general history of this Dominion city will be of interest. The city was visited in 1535 by Jaeques Cartier but founded on May 8th, 1642, by Maisonneuve. The Indian village of Hochelago in 1535 has grown into the Montreal of today with 330,000 people, while the Indians have moved across the river and taken the name of their home, Hochelago, with them. Montreal surrendered to the British under Gen. Murray in 1760. It was taken by the Americans in 1775 but retaken by the British in 1776.

We found Montreal to be a city of wide extent and delightfully located on an Island in the St. Lawrence river. The city stretches along the bank of this great body of water for several miles and well back, being built on a series of terraces said to be the former levels of the river, which terminate in Mount Royal. This mount rises 700 feet above the river, the eminence which Jacques Cartier ascended and looked with startled eyes upon the palisaded Indian town, surrounded by vast fields of grain, at the west base of the mountain. The summit and wooded slopes of this mountain form a public pleasure garden and the most fashionable drive about the city. We enjoyed the ride to its summit from which a magnificent view of the river and city were obtained. It, however, does not rival in any way the view from our High Rock, Pen Mar. The scenery about the city is not particularly attractive, yet the long reaches of graceful hills make a pleasing view and in winter afford opportunity for fine sport.

It is Sunday. From scores of church towers peal out the chimes in sweetest melody. We first visit the great St. Peter's Cathedral, built after the model of St. Peter's at Rome and being one-fourth as large. Height, 258 feet; length, 333; breadth 222 with walls four feet thick. The building is of stone and seats 14,000 people. We remained until after Mass, then hunted for a Methodist church and found one that did credit to Methodism but the congregation looked lost. This church seats 12,000 people and is a most magnificent edifice costing $75,000.

The parish church of Notre Dame, erroneously called the French Cathedral stands upon Place d'Armes, Notre Dame street (the coldest spot in Montreal at all seasons of the year) It is built after the model of Notre Dame (Our Lady) in Paris. It holds 10,000 people comfortably, and when crowded, as it often is, it has been known to hold 15,000 people. The length of the church is 255 feet, and the breadth 134 feet. The two principal towers are 227 feet high. The Bourdon bell, the largest in America, weighs 24,780 lbs., and cost $25,000. It is 8 feet 7 inches in diameter, and 6 feet 9 inches high. It is one foot thick. The clappers weigh 860 lbs. Besides this enormous bell there are 10 other bells, which, when rung as on great occasions, make very agreeable chimes. It is stated that the entire church cost over $6,000,000. It is the largest ecclesiastical edifice in America, except the cathedral of Mexico. It has 19 double confession boxes, where 19 priests can hear 38 confessions at one time. It has two galleries, one above the other.

The church of Notre Dame de Lourdes, built in 1875, for the purpose of illustrating the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception, is the most beautiful church in the city. The adoration of the Virgin under this name dates from the 11th of February, 1858, when it is stated that the Blessed Virgin appeared to a young shepherdess 14 years of age, named Bernadette Soubirous, at the Grotto of Massabielle, on the banks of the river Gave, near the town of Lourdes (Loord), in the diocese of Tarbes, on the upper Pyrenees, in the southwest of France, 530 miles from Paris. It is stated that the Blessed Virgin appeared to this girl eighteen times, and told her that "she was the Immaculate Conception," and sent a message by her to the clergy to tell them to build a chapel for her on that rock. She revealed a secret to her, which she told her not to make known. It is also further stated that water, with healing qualities, gushed out of the rock at that time, and continued to flow ever since. In the basement of Notre Dame de Lourdes, at Montreal, is a fac-simile of the Grotto at Lourdes.

About two-thirds of the people are Roman Catholics. The general good feeling existing between parties of different shades of opinion renders Montreal less subject to party disturbances than other cities of the same population. This rule, of course, like every other rule, had one or two exceptions; but the following two instances show that the above rule has been very well followed. In the olden times, just after the Conquest, the Protestants used one of the Roman churches after the morning mass. For 20 years after 1766, the Church of England people occupied the Church of the Recollets every Sunday afternoon. The Presbyterians used the same church before 1792, and when the congregation moved to their first church in St. Gabriel Street, they presented to the priests of the Recollet Church a gift of candles for the high altar, and of the wine for the mass, as a token of good-will, and thanks for the gratuitous use of the church. Could this be done today? Should there not be more Christian unity now than at that time? F.G.U.
