When the Gravy's on the Buckwheats.

When the gravy's on the buckwheats
And the sausages are hot,
When the steam is floating upward
From the shining coffee pot,
When the cook stirs up the batter
That was set the night before,
And when little Bob and Clara
Smack their lips and yell for more;
Oh it's then a man is always
Feeling pretty near his best—
If there isn't any trouble
With the works beneath his vest;
And it's then he ought to humbly
Thank the Lork for what he's got—
When the gravy's on the buckwheats
And the sausages are hot.

There's a fragrance that comes floating
From the pancakes on the plate,
That should nerve a man to action—
Make him strong for any fate.
There is joy, There is inspiration,
In the smears on Bessie's chin,
And it's good to see dear Willie
As he scoops the sausage in;
And what swee ter music is there,
Than the rasping, sappling sound
That the busy cook produces
As she stirs the stuff around?
Oh, each precious, luscious mouthful,
Quickly finds the proper spot,
When the gravy's on the buckwheats
And the sausages are hot.

☞The good American farmer called upon a doctor, and was ushered into the library. At once the well-filled bookshelves drew his attention.

"Are you fond of reading?" asked the doctor, noting the wandering gaze.

"Well, yes," returned the farmer, modestly.

"I should be pleased to lend you a book to take home with you," said the other. "Just take anyone that you think you'd like to read."

"O, I'm no good at selectin'," replied the old man. "You pick one out, doctor."

So the doctor, in a spirit of fun, gave the farmer a book written by Plato. The old man went his way, and at the end of a week reappeared with the book under his arm.

"Well," queried the doctor, "did you read the book?"

"Yes, I did," was the emphatic answer.

"And what did you think of it?"

"It was fust rate," responded the farmer; "I've read it through from kiver to kiver. I never heard tell of this fellow Plato before, but, all the same, I'm glad to find that old chap has been writing up some of my very best ideas."

☞Said a white sister for whom old Aunt Hannah was washing:

"Aunt Hannah, did you know that you have been accused of stealing?"

"Yes, I hearn about it," said Aunt Hannah, and went on with her washing.

"Well, you won't rest under it, will you?" said the sister.

Aunt Hannah raised herself up from her work, with a broad smile on her face, and, looking up full at the white sister, said:

"De Lord knows I ain't stole nuthin', and I Knows I ain't, an' life's too short for me to be provin' an' splainin all de time; so I jest goes on my way rejoicin'. They knows they ain't tellin' the truf, and they'll feel ashamed and quit after awhile. If I can pleas de Lord, dat is enough for me."
