the Union will never abandon this Claim of their State, more especially if they consider that the loss of time consumed in this Negotiation although a serious disadvantage, is of little Moment when compared to that, of the favourable conjunctures which have passed away, never probably to recur.- the one when to the pressure of a foreign War so formidable as to threaten the National existence of Great Britain and which rendered highly desirable every amicable adjustment of differences which might increase her enemies; has now succeeded the security and confidence of a general peace.- the other when motives of prudence as well as honor which gave poignancy force to the Claims of this State on the British Government whilst they were urging against us, the doubtful demands of their own Citizens, are now or will be silenced by complete success on their part.- With what prospects under these circumstances may we be permitted to ask, will the State of Maryland appeal to British Courts of Justice with the complexion discountenanced of their Government and the manifest desertion of our own