The Marvel Farm, 1-2 mile from Goldsboro, purchased last week by John T Carter and C. W. Hobbs, 130 1-4 acres, is a most desirable property for a home Full particulars regarding price and terms, can be obtained by applying to either of the purchasers

Edward B. Louderbough, publisher of the Sentinel at Dover, was taken to a Philadelphia hospital on Monday by his physician, Dr. E. S. Anderson, to undergo examination and, if necessary, an operation at a hospital there for serious internal trouble. A number of his friends "saw him off" and cheered him for his ordeal, at the railroad station.

Potatoes are even lower in price this year than for several years. As low as eighty cents a barrel has been paid in the lower part of the State for many, and few are bringing more than $1.25. The average price is around $1.00. This means that there is no money in it for the grower and very little in it for anyone. It would be very interesting to know, however, just what the consumers in the city pay for those potatoes when they get them on the table.

The Delaware State News Company has become the owner of the State Street property site adjoining Central Law building, on which are situated real estate offices of Charles Butler and Jefferson L. Ford. A modern newspaper office and building will be built for [illegible]sing the Dover newspaper. The [illegible]oining property, now occupied Magistrate John B. Wharton as office, and William F. Cook as restaurant, was sold to Cook for $2,500, by A. B. Magee, who recently purchased the sites.

Death of Mrs. Charles E. Stevens.

Mrs. Edna T. Stevens, wife of Mr. Charles E. Stevens and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Cook, died of a complication of diseases at her home in Denton about 6 o'clock on Friday afternoon last, aged 31 years. Mrs. Stevens' death though by some not unexpected, came as a sad surprise to many, and cast a gloom again over the town that of late has been one of sad happenings. She was a womanly woman, meeting the various relations and responsibilities of life with womanly instinct. and filling them with womanly tenderness and love. Her life from childhood was pure and good. At the age of 14 years she associated herself with the church, and from that time, till called to membership in the church triumphant, was an active and useful member. Her pastor, Rev. Mr. Gantt of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in speaking of her says, "I could always depend upon her for church work, for she was among my very best." Another said of her, "We don't find her like every day. She never spoke of others an unkind word." No, she had no time for the uncharitable, but in loving obedience to the new commandment, held her conversation in heaven. A dutiful child, wife and mother has ceased her blessed ministries, a devoted member of the church on earth has ceased from among men, but we shall see her again in the blessed hereafter, the shadowless land, the beautiful life of heaven.

Funeral service, conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. Gibson Gantt, of the Protestant Episcopal Church assisted by Rev. W. J. D. Lucas of the Methodist Protestant Church, was held at the late home at 4 o'clock Monday afternoon, and interment was in the family lot in Denton cemetery. A large and beautiful floral offering testified to the esteem in which the departed was held among those who knew and loved her. Besides her husband and parents, Mrs. Stevens is survived by a little daughter, Elizabeth, 9 years of age. The pall bearers were Messrs J. H. C. Legg, Marc Bryant, Allen Bryant, George R. Percy, J. Kemp Stevens and W. O. Ledhum. L.

Exciting Yacht Ride.

The Philadelphia yacht Wissahickon, owned by A. Gilbert Longaker, carrying a happy crowd of pleasure seekers on a moonlight trip down the river Nanticoke caught fire from an explosion of gasoline at Federalsburg Sunday night, according to a report to the Baltimore American, and those aboard barely escaped with their lives.

Those in the party were:

Orlando McClure and Benjamin Nichols, of Baltimore.

Louise Wilson, of Cambridge, Md.

William C. Leslie and Horace and Hiram Longaker, of Wissahickon.

Clarence Handy and Floy Williams of Philadelphia.

Harvey Williams, Ralph Brown, Wm. C. Smith, Theodore Adams, Henry Muller, Charles White, Norma and Veva Brower, Ethel and Laura and Iva Davis, Eva and Virginia Williams, Ruth and Agnes Elliot, Eva Wright, of Federalsburg.

The yacht had scarcely left its moorings at Federalsburg when Theodore Adams, the engineer, who stood by the machine through the terrible ordeal, like another Jim Bludsoe, noticed that there was something wrong with the feed pipe. It had begun to work loose. He no sooner attempted to correct the trouble than the engine backfired, igniting the gasoline that had leaked out with the thumping of the piston.

The yacht was ablaze in an instant. There was a rush of flames, the screams of women, excited men running hither and thither, and in the midst of all this the engineer, making herculean efforts to quiet the crowd and keep the fire from reaching the gasoline tank.

Of the 25 on board, only six could swim. In the midst of the excitement Miss Norma Brower, daughter of Prof. A. C. Brower, principal of the Federalsburg High School, and Horace and Hiram Longaker jumped overboard in 20 feet of water. None of them could swim.

In an instant Orlando McClure, one of the two Baltimoreans in the crowd, was overboard and, seizing hold of the two young men, who were nearest him, turned them toward the burning boat, where others pulled them back on board. In the meanwhile Miss Brower seemed to have gone under, but suddenly she appeared before the bewildered gaze of her rescuer and he swam with her to some marshland not many yards away.

However, none of the women fainted, but when the first feeling of panic was over they tore their dresses off and tried to help the men smother the flames.

The engineer, however, in the midst of the [illegible] was being badly burned, and when the girls saw this they attempted to jump overboard.

Several men who could swim seized the girls before they could jump and jumped overboard with them. They then began a swim for the nearest shore, 100 yards away, which was little more than a marshland.

Arrived at this uncertain landingplace the girls were left standing in three feet of mud while the young men swam back to the boat to help extinguish the flames and help the men they had left behind. They finally managed to extinguish the flames.

Clothes and jewelry belonging to members of the party were lost in the accident.

After the fire was extinguished the young men who could swim helped the others to swim back to the shore where the young ladies were still standing in the mud and the united party struggled to drier land. Then the march back home began, where, after a walk of five miles the party, footsore, weary, bruised and hungry finally arrived.
