MILLINERY

Announcing the season's first showing of chapeaux that surpass in sheer beauty and diversity all previous presentations. Some feature sleek shimmering straw; others rich silken fabrics; embroidery of Oriental persuasion; odd sort of flowers — in fact all that is unusual.

Apparel Destined for the Season's Leadership, are These Suits and Three-piece Costumes

With consummate cleverness the new frocks find many ways to charm. Ingenious minds have told an old story in a new way, presenting sleeves, hemlines, sleevelines and necklines in delightful innovations.

To look beautiful is well, but to look young—that is the ambition of every woman. Fashion has assisted this spring with sport suits in boxed and flared lines, unique sleeve and cuff and straight lined skirts. These in pleasing tweeds.

This store is a good place to visit these days. New spring goods in all their splendor grace every nook. Come on down, the trip will drive drab winter thoughts away.

Uncle Johns Poem

THE OLD OYSTER BUCKET

The old oaken bucket has ceased to engender a theme for the poet, or song for the muse; the fire-plug, and hydrant, and engine house tender, supply through a meter the stuff that I use. And now comes the bucket, constructed of paper, that dangles beside me as homeward I go; I've learned to regard it a cute little caper, to fool my old woman who likes 'em, you know. How fondly I cling to my six little pickles, my grocer tied up in a sycamore tray—I gaze at the clouds while the vinegar trickles and spots up my clothes with a stain that will stay. But the square paper bucket I hold as a treasure, and proudly I swing it, as homeward I speed; there may have been buckets that held better measure, but it's got 'em skinned when it comes to a feed.
