Thru the friendship of some of the members of the High School faculty, the Jesters offered to give an entertainment for the school.

The Jesters were as the name implies, full of jest and mirth. The audience was kept laughing all of the time by their jests and pranks. A jazz orchestra added its part to the program. A quartet gave two selections, two monologues were given, and as a final number, a chorus sang the Western Maryland Alma Mater.

Sam Wright took up the burden at this point and finished the game in fine style. There were no outstanding stars of the game, but Joseph Bernard aided materially in securing the three runs by Greensboro.

TWO RURAL SCHOOLS BUILD CLEVER BIRD HOUSES

Traveling from Federalsburg to Denton one comes suddenly upon a grove of trees in which is located Howard's school. Last week in making that trip we were delighted to see the pupils had been busy making bird houses and have placed them around on the trees in the grove. One cunning little house attracted our attention. It must have been made from a chalk box; it has two rooms, and the roof has been covered with a coat of paint to keep the elements from destroying that soft wood. The birds seemed to be pleased for we noticed them inspecting these new bungalows where many pairs during the summer will set up housekeeping.

On coming up to the next store we learned that the Williston school children had also been likewise busy, and they have made some very artistic ones, which have not yet been placed.

Children who have for their teacher women interested in developing the child's love for God's great out-of-doors have truly become the benefactors of a lifetime heritage.. We thought when we saw those little houses at Howard's school, "That teacher has the principle of true teaching." There is a cultural influence from the study of birds which is akin to the study of art. The marvelous craftsmanship exhibited by some of our birds has set many a boy to thinking along lines of architecture and nature study. These are the greatest schools which a child may be privileged to attend.

To the teachers and pupils of these schools we extend our congratulations for their originality and example of civic pride.

Essay on "Rosa Bonheur"

The chairman of the Educational Committee of Williston Community Club was most delightfully entertained at Howards school on the afternoon of Arbor Day, Friday, the 6th.

Sixteen of the children of that school have planted at their own homes a memorial tree. For this they are each entitled to membership in the American Tree Association. These children have been to the woods, selected their tree and with the help of older boys or father they have dug and planted it near the house or along the roadside of the farm on which they reside.

On the wall of the school we noticed a beautiful little copy of that famous picture, "The Horse Fair," by Rosa Bonheur. The children have been studying the life of this wonderful artist, and the following was taken (at random) from the entire pile of papers as they had been handed to the teacher. We think it is well worth publication.

Rosa Bonheur

Rosa Bonheur was one of the most beautiful and wonderful painters that was ever known. She could draw pictures when she was only eight years old. They lived on the sixth floor of a building in France. There were four of them.

One day when their mother called them in from play she saw that Rosa was missing. They looked everywhere for her; at last they went to the butcher shop and found her there drawing a picture of a pig. Her mother made her go home then.

The next time that Rosa was missing they looked around and found her drawing another picture. Sometimes she would be drawing people going home from church.

Soon afterward she started to school. She did not like to go to school. In time of school she was always drawing instead of studying. She used to draw so much that they would make her leave her pencil and paper at school. She would then take a stick and draw pictures in the sand.

One day she went out to a man's house and asked him if she could stay awhile and study cattle. He said yes. While she was there she drew a picture of a cow. When she got ready to leave she gave it to him. He sold it for three hundred dollars. Rosa also painted a large picture called "The Horse Fair." She tried to sell it in Paris; no one would buy it there so she sent it to Belgium and no one would buy it there; so she sent it to America and someone bought it here. It is now found in the city of New York.

BINGLE AND BUNGLE

The Puckertown Philosophers

By C. DURANT JONES

"It does beat all," remarked Mike Bungle, when he ran into Ted Bingle at the Hookworm Club.

"What beats all, Mike?" asked Ted.

"Why the accidents Bije Henry has," answered Mike. "He started out to the country this morning in his flivver, and ran into a telephone pole, and got throwed over into the next township, and pretty bad banged up. Seems as if he has more than his share of accidents. He is about the unluckiest feller in these parts."

"Maybe you call it luck," said Ted. "But to me it looks like something else. Bije has a habit of having bad luck, as you call it. And the bad luck habit is a hard one to break off. I have known Bije for a good many years and ever since he was a young man it's been the same old story. He knew the telephone pole was there, yet he drove into it. Three years ago he got hit by a freight train on the Punkinvine, yet the Punkinvine has been there for thirty years and has been runnin' freight trains all that time. Bije went to the state fair one time and had just got on the train when he dropped his ticket and it blew out of the window. Last winter he was walking along the streets of Lincoln Center, with his head up in the air, and walked right into an open coal hole and broke three ribs. He was carryin' a plank on his shoulder one day when he was walking down our street, and just as he passed Walker's store, he turned around to holler at somebody and poked his plank right through Walker's plate glass winder, and it cost him twenty-five bucks to fix it. When he got his leg broke in the city five years ago, it was from stepping off a street car before it had stopped. That time he got so badly burned and had to go to a hospital, it was because he lighted a match to look into his gasoline tank to see if it was empty. I guess it wa'n't, for it blew him over the back year fence. And the time his folks almost died with typhoid fever, it was found that they had been drinking cistern water that hadn't been filtered. And he has had three fires at his house, and every one of them started from his throwing a match into the waste basket after he lighted his pipe. Bije came mighty near dyin' with pneumonia last winter, jpst because he got hot helping his wife run the washing machine and he went out and stood in a cold northwest wind, in his shirt sleeves to cool off. His bad luck is mostly no sense."

"Yes," said Mike. "But you will admit that he DOES seem to have a lot of bad luck."

"Sure," said Ted. "Bad luck always follers, if you haint got any head, or don't use the one you got."
