Soleni of Lamb—Cut cold, roast Lamb in thin slices. Cook 5 minutes, 2 tablespoons of any nice fat, ½ tablespoon finely chopped onion. Add lamb, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and cover with 1 cup cold lamb gravy seasoned with Worcestershire sauce. Cook until thoroughly heated. Arrange slices overlapping one another lengthwise on platter, pour around sauce, and garnish with toast points. A few stoned olives and mushrooms improve this sauce.

Baked Trout—Brook trout are nicest for this but small Delaware Bay Trout will also be appreciated cooked this way. Clean, season with salt, black pepper and paprika. Lay in greased baking pan, drerge with flour, sprinkle with chopped parsley and bits of fat, pour over all a little vinegar and water, bake in a hot oven until done, basting frequently unless you have a regular roasting pan. Serve with cream sauce into which you will want some hardboiled eggs. Chopped in cubes, especially if you use Delaware Bay Trout, because the meat of that fish is dry.

Pear and Pimento Salad—Fill each canned pimento with 2 halves of pears (also canned at this time of year.) Place each pimento in a nest of lettuce and serve with french dressing or boiled dressing if you prefer. The french is nicer unless you object too strongly to the oil.

A story of the Pea.—for our girls. The Ancients used this Vegetable in their ceremonies to testify to a regard that in our day of good cooking, this nourishing and favorite vegetable should not be considered any the less.

The Scottish and English lassies bedeck themselves with peavines by way of consolation when their lovers have found maidens more nearly to their ideas. But when an eligible Miss in shelling peas discovers nine in a pod, she puts the pod on the Lintel, and watches for the first male person who is unmarried to enter the room—for he will surely marry her.

FEMININE TOPICS

Cross stitch is being effectively used on little hats for little ladies. Miss 6-year-old has her sports headgear, in these grown-up days, and it is more than likely composed of red or blue cloth cross-stitched around the crown with fantastic birds and beasts.

Very large, square buckles are one by-product seen to-day of the excavations at Luxor. These buckles, made in exact duplicate of those found in the excavations, are beautifully carved semi-precious stones. They hold the Egyptian draperies on the front of a skirt.

Natural lynx outlines the square neck and is drawn around the hips of a blue chiffon evening dress. Its popularity as a summer fur is already established.

There is a casque toque in one of the current magazines which is an almost exact replica of the head-dress worn in ancient Luxor. It is of shiny straw, close-fitting over all the head and rising to a slight peak in back. From ear to ear across the front is a wide band of colored straw, turned sharply back from the face like a ruffle.

Although many people do not realize it, the same rules apply to correspondence and telephone conversations that apply to other forms of intercourse—and, as one writer has put it, you would not think of walking up to someone's door and refusing to give your name. So, while we agree with the woman who called us up the other day to request that we make some mention of the vulgarity of sending anonymous letters, it strikes us as somewhat inconsistent that, at the same time, she refused to give her name.

Putting initials on bath towels has become quite a fine art. They are now embroidered on disc of fine colored linen or chambray, which are then mounted on the towel and buttonhole-stitched in place. The colors of the foundation match the borders of the towels.

A bloused jaquette of red leather, collared and cuffed in black fox, is worn with a black plaited cashmere skirt, making an extremely attractive costume.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

Fine ashes and turpentine make a splendid paste for cleaning steel and brass.

The marks left on paint when matches are scratched on it can be removed by rubbing with cut lemon.

Thirty-five years ago American women were spending comparatively little on paint and powder, but they were spending $8,000,000 a year on bustles.

It is advisable to buy your linens and cottons of standard makes when buying or the household. You will be more certain of their wearing qualities.

Suede is a fashionable as well as a very durable material for the short box coat on the sport order. A coat of this kind, worn with one of those attractive pleated plaid skirts and a little suede hat, would make a costume worth having.

The controversy over the long skirt, which tore the fashion world asunder a few months ago and kept the newspapers full of letters for and against, has been settled. It was settled both ways. Afternoon and evening frocks today reach the instep or the ankle, but sports are once more only a very few inches below the knees.

Dotted veils are very much in evidence. In many cases they serve the purpose of putting a little more life or trimming on an otherwise plain hat, and give it just the bit of dash or color that it needs.

Be careful when buying pillow slips to have them big enough to allow the pillow to slip in easily. If you select slips into which the pillows have to be stuffed, they will wear out very quickly.

The Explanation

"Jones has the most happy idea of married life! He believes that man and wife should always be in full harmony; that they should mutually yield every point to this one end and have no thought but that of true domestic happiness."

"Splendid! And, of course, Mrs. Jones agrees with him."

"How d'yuh get that way? Jones isn't married.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

A Good Job

Charles M. Schwab delights in telling the following story of an incident in one of the steel mills under his charge:

"One day while I was passing through the works I looked out a second-story window into the first floor of an adjoining shop and saw a big Irishman sitting on the handles of his wheelbarrow smoking his pipe. I called to him. 'What are you doing down there? Why don't you get to work?'

"To which the Irishman replied, 'Well, tell me, and who are you, sir?'

"I said, 'I'm the general manager.' "

" 'Well, young man,' said he, 'you've got a damned good job; you'd better take care of it.' "—Forbes Magazine.

Befitting The Occasion

The drug store was located near a popular playhouse. The matinee hour was nearly due and people were beginning to filter by.

Temporarily abandoning his experiments to find a substitute for gasoline, the druggist emerged from behind the counter and hailed the window dresser.

"John, I've kind of lost track. Is there a comedy on at the theater this week?"

"No, sir, a sad play."

"Very sad?"

"Weepy."

"Then take the chocolates out of the window and put in smelling salts."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Worse To Come

Having been served with a wedge of some yellow substance, the husband poked at it cautiously with his fork, and finally turned it over heavily on his plate, asking:

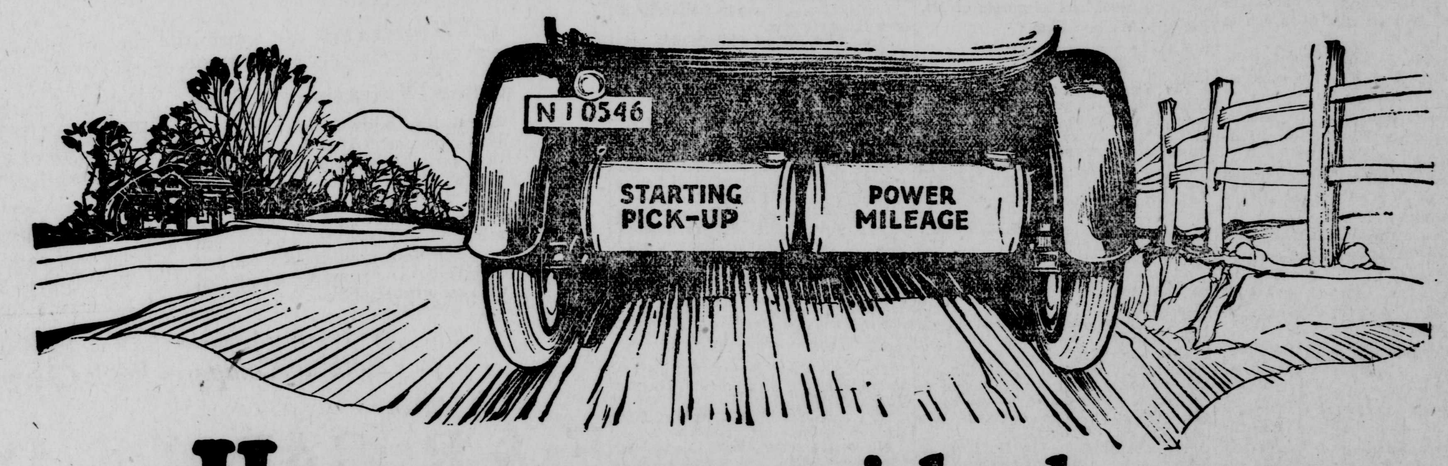
"What is this?"

"Pound cake. What of it?" the wife replied.

"Nothing," said the husband. "I thought my section weighed more than a pound. What are you going to make next?"

"Marble cake," said the wife defiantly.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Fortunately for the woman who is plump, there remains to-day another style in spite of the mummy-like, snugly wrapped vogue in which only slim women look well. The loose and graceful chemise frock is still here.



Have you ever wished you could carry TWO tanks of gasoline on your car?

—one for starting and pick-up —one for power and mileage

SOMETIMES the man who is proud of the power he gets on the hill is the very man to wear out his battery trying to turn over in the morning! Not if he carries "Standard", the complete gasoline.

Why are gasolines different? Because this motor-fuel we call gasoline is not so simple as it seems. Even the smallest drop contains starting-fuel, pickup-fuel, power-fuel and mileage-fuel, in some proportion or other.

And remember: it is this proportion that makes a gasoline good or poor. And it is in this detail that "Standard", the Balanced Gasoline, excels. By scientifically balancing the various constituents of every drop, flame generation and full, clean burning is assured. This means all the gas is burned up —giving maximum power and no noticeable carbon residue.

Long effort, experience and scientific research have produced The Balanced Gasoline, the complete, all-round, all-purpose motor fuel. Try it out this season—for your own satisfaction.
