ent corps. A considerable number of persons have attached themselves to the Cavalry companies since the last year, Regimental returns were made, by which the apportionment of Infantry was struck - but do not consider themselves liable to the infantry draught; which make the requisition come much harder on the remaining infantry. - Further, some of the persons alluded to joined the Cavalry since the General orders for the draught were issued, and even after the Brigade officer had drawn the apportionment for the different Regiments. Some of them indeed so short a time before the day on which the draught was ordered that the infantry officers were ignorant of it, and have actually draughted some of them as infantry. Are those draughts valid, or not? I will only add that a new Troop has been ~~raised~~ within about a month or six weeks, which has taken so many out of one company of Infantry that it will take nearly half the remainder to answer the requisition made; unless the newly made Troopers shall serve their tour of duty for which many of them are draughted. I am also directed to enquire of you whether, if any one company of Cavalry volunteers, to the number that may be required of the whole
