PREDICTS PEACHES WILL BE PLENTIFUL

J. S. Dennee Says Prospect For State Crop Is Above 10-Year Average

697,000 BUSHELS EXPECTED

Peaches will be plentiful this year in Maryland, although the heavy spring and summer rains, accompanied in some instances by hail, will damage slightly the apple and pear crops. These predictions were made yesterday by John S. Dennee, agricultural statistician of the United States Department of Agriculture.

"The peach prospect for the State July 1," Mr. Dennee said, "was much above the 10-year average. A crop of 697,000 bushels is indicated for Maryland, compared with 631,000 bushels last year. In Delaware 239,000 bushels are expected this season, compared with 225,000 bushels in 1923.

"Pear crops in the State, based on reports of conditions up to July 1, it is forecast, will total 373,00 bushels, about 1,000 bushels less than last year.

"In Delaware, however, the crops will fall off about 7,000 bushels, as only 363,000 bushels are expected this year, compared with 370,000 bushels in 1923.

"Apples will yield about 2,119,000 bushels during the season, compared with 2,300,000 last year. However, the average yield for the last five years is only 1,714,000. A commercial crop of 382,000 barrels is indicated for the year.

"In Delaware the prospect is somewhat better. There a crop of 1,318,000 bushels of apples is forecast, compared with 1,200,000 bushels last year. A commercial crop of 369,000 barrels should be available."
