PREPARATION OF "GREEN BARRIER" MOTION PICTURE TIMELY

A new motion-picture film, "The Green Barrier," recently produced by the United States Departmen of Agriculture, and dealing with livestock in the Piney woods.

The picture shows in story form the heavy losses caused by the common practice of setting fire to the dry grass in the woods under the mistaken idea that it improves the grazing. On the contrary it reduces the cattle carrying capacity of the pastures and destroys pine cones which otherwise would bring about a more rapid reforestation of the cutover area. By discouraging burning, the film is expected to bring about better pastures for livestock and at the same time aid in reforestation.

Stopping the practice of burning pastures will allow thousands of acres to restock with young pines. Work on the picture, which is nearly ready for distribution, is being expediated. Since the seed crop this season is heavier than in many years, the completion of a film comes at a time when a picture of the character described will have maximum influence.

The name of the picture, "The Green Barrier," is based on the fire resisting properties of carpet grass, a valuable southern species of pasture grass. In the climax of the story, the carpet grass stops a forest fire, thereby saving lives, timber and farm property.

There is no thrill like that which is experienced when a loved one or a dear friend smiles and thanks you for some little remembrance of the glad Christmas season.

As on sophisticated person once said: "After I gave the kid a doll, her face lighted up, and she looked so blame happy that I felt like a 'Little Tin God With Wings on'."

It goes to the heart, this Christmas giving.
