Eastern Shore Happenings

Cambridge, Md., May 15—A man hunt, begun in Delaware early this morning, received a temporary setback at noon today, in Dorchester, when State Policeman Linford Hoch, of Delaware, was forced off the road at a bad turn at East New Market, fell from his motorcycle. He was picked up semi-conscious and brought to Cambridge Hospital.

Hoch, with officers Jones, of Cambridge; Ward, of Easton, and Barnseller, Delaware, had started out to run down two trucks, one of which, while being rapidly driven through Dover this morning, struck and killed an aged negro, John Loat. The cars, it is said, were running rapidly side by side. Hoch came at once to this state and enlisted the aid of the Maryland officers, the trail leading to Dorchester county.

Eight planes winging their way through Maryland skies will cut their motors and glide to a landing somewhere near Centreville, on Saturday morning, May 30.

The flotilla of aerial speedsters, under the command of Major William D. Tipton, chief of the Maryland National Guard Air Service, will be enroute to unknown spots on the Eastern Shore, in connection with the "Sealed Orders Flight" promoted by the Baltimore American.

The committee appointed to canvass the town for subscriptiosn to purchase the armory site had a meeting Monday night and on Tuesday morning released the news to the public that the John Collins site over the bridge has been selected as the site of Laurel's new $50,000 armory.

The campaign started several weeks ago with six locaitons offered. The option on the Deshield property near the school was withdrawn by the owners. The canning factory site was found to be in such a location that it would require too much expense to put it in shape for construction work to begin. Other sites were too expensive.

The Collins property is located just over the Laurel State Highway bridge on a slight hill. It will make a beautiful location surrouned by fine cedar trees.

Cambridge, Md., May 15—Capt. Calvert S. Leonard, skipper of the big bugeye Emma Faulkner, claimed by many to be the fastest bugeye on the bay, is out to take the measure of George Todd, of Crisfield, and any other of the two-stick sharp-stern craft that cares to enter the lists against him in the fifth annual Chesapeakke Bay champion workboat race.

Captain Leonard, who hails from Cambridge, was the very first skipper to rush his entry of the Emma Faulkner by mail to the secretary of the Workboat Races Association.

And it was not the defi hurled on Saturday by Captain Clarence Todd, Crisfield, master of the George Todd, that hastened Captain Leonard's entry.

Chestertown, Md., May 15—William Ford, 93, Kent county's "grand old man," died at his home near here following an illness of several days. He was probably the oldest resident in Kent and up to within several days of his illness was as active as a man of 50. For 55 years Mr. Ford had been connected with the Kent County Almshouse, 30 years of which he was a trustee and president of the board, and during the past 25 years had been superintendent, having the assistance during late years of his daughter, Miss Sue B. Ford. For years he was a leading farmer.

Mr. Ford was one of the most widely known men in Kent. He is survived by one son, David B. Ford, of Chestertown and two daughters, Mrs. Ella Clough, of Chestertown, and Miss Sue B. Ford, at home.

Mr. Ford is said to be the only man in Kent county who tilled three large farms at one time, two as the tenant of the late Judge Joseph A Wickes, and his own.

Dover, Del., May 14—Governor Robinson today announced the appointment of the following as members of the building commission, to which will be entrusted the construction of an addition to the State Capitol here and the expenditure of $150,000: Frank Overdeed, Peter J. Ford, secretary of state; William G. Taylor, all of Wilmington; Arley B. Mage, Dover; Harry V. Lyons, Lewes.

Salisbury, Md., May 14—An elusive burglar is believed by police to be responsible for the robbery of seven homes and a store here during the past 10 days.

On two occasions he is reported to have been seen in the homes and at another time talked with an intended victim, but the police are without a clear description, other than he is of small stature.

The largest theft was at the home of Thomas H. Tilghman, Isabelle street, where $300 in Liberty bonds and cash were stolen. Other homes entered were those of State Senator E. Dale Adkins, Mrs. C. W. Bradley, Mrs. Harry Smith, Joseph Malone, Washington Adkins and Dr. A. D. Brown, a negro physician.

Crawling through a small aperature, the thief obtained a suit of clothes and a few articles at the department stare of R. E. Powell & Co.

Cambridge, Md., May 15—State Superintendent of Education Cook, members of the school board of Dorchester county and many prominent citizens attended last evening at the dedication of the new high school building at Hoopers Island. Prof. Vernon Martin, principal, presided and introduced as the first speaker Superintendent Cook, who was followed by Superintendent James B. Noble of the Dorchester county schools; Clarence L. Saxton, the new president of the county board of education; John A Baker, president of the board of county commissioners; H. P. Spedden, county comissioner; former Governor Harrington, and Rev. Charles H. Hudson, who has been, in a large measure, responsible for the building of the high school.

THE OUTCOME OF A HARMLESS FLIRTATION

The Inn, like so many that dot the smaller resorts along the east coast of Florida, was spotless and there was a certain air of wholesomeness about it. Not so bad, I thought, as I stood viewing myself before the mirror of my dresser.

There was a light tap at the door of the room adjoining. I moved over toward the sound and asked softly, "Who's there?"

"It's I, Warren, I have a little 'night cap' for you and really it's delicious."

"But how am I to get it?" I answered, "besides, really, I don't think I'd better."

"Nonsense," he whispered, "I brought this home from Paris. A small drink of it will make your dreams more lovely."

I hesitated. A little couldn't possibly hurt me. Besides, I was not sleepy and I would enjoy a few moments of Warren Fisher's bright conversation.

"But the key? It isn't here," I contended.

"That's all right, it's on this side. All I want is your permission, may I?"

The door opened slightly.

"Hurry now," I was nervous, "it's an unearthly hour for me to be entertaining you in such an informal manner." I adopted a tone of light banter.

"Rats! These good people have been in their beds for hours. Besides, Sallie, I just had to see you."

He came nearer.

"Adoree, MY Adoree, you wonderful glorious creature," he put his arms about me and attempted to kiss me.

"Don't, please, not here, I hate anything like this—somehow it seems so sordid, especially under these conditions."

"But, Adoree, if you could know how I've longed for you, I've worshipped you every minute since I left Pensacola. If you could realize how I've remembered each precious mannerism about you, the way you laugh, the bright wit that is as much a part of you as your radiant beauty. Oh! I want you for my own, mine, MINE, do you hear me?"

He drew me closer.

"But your wife?" I pulled away sharply, "are you mad?"

"Yes, for you, you wonderful person!"

I disliked very much the way things were going.

"But your wife?" I reiterated, "really you are not fair to her, Warren, and after all she deserves some consideration."

"Oh, what difference does that make? Besides she's far, far away. She's only my wife, Adoree, while you—you are the light of my life and most of all, you are my sweetheart."

"No, no," I shuddered, as I began to realize the situation.

"What! You won't be my sweetheart?" he asked in amazement, "It is a much better arrangement, for matrimony is death to romance," and he held me closer. "Don't you care for me a little?" His eyes were eager.

"Go to your room, immediately, or I'll call down stairs," was my answer.

"Ah, now, you weren't so offish when I made love to you on the pier in Pensacola that evening." He changed his tactics.

"You're insulting, I think you are perfectly revolting! At least I thought you were a gentleman even though you do flirt outrageously. And I'm leaving if I have to walk to Miami," I declared vehemently. "I'll wake every one in the Inn and tell them about you being so—horrid," I sobbed on the verge of hysterics.

"Come, come, do you think anyone would believe the old story of an automobile being out of commission?" He threw back his head and his lips curled in a sneering manner, "and don't think they'd be such boobs as to think you were not in on this little party."

"Do you mean that the transmission was not broken and that you were stalling?" I demanded, my eyes flashing.

"So innocent, aren't you?" he questioned, "you society girls of this generation amuse me with your injured feelings. Do you think that you can lead a man on with the open wiles and veiled promises of an adventuress and then pull a baby stare when he accepts the invitation?"

I remembered the warning of Curtiss Wright, who had tried to show me the danger of the headlong speed in which, he said, I was racing. Oh! if I had only listened, I would have his love and protection and would have escaped this issue.

"They will believe me down stairs. I'll make them?" I stamped my foot and momemntarily my rage was rising.

"Look at the time," he demanded, pointing to my wrist watch, "almost 2 o'clock in the morning. Is it likely they'd hear to such a story?"

"Pa, what is preparedness?"

"Preparedness, my son, is the act of wearing spectacles to breakfast when you know you are going to have grapefruit."
