MORALS, RELIGION AND COMMON SENSE
IN HIDDEN BOOKS OF THE BIBLE

In the following paragraph are hidden thirty-seven books of the Bible. To find them you must find the proper letter with which to begin, then spell the consecutive letters until the book is properly spelled. The book may begin with any letter of a word, and end with any letter of the same or different word. In spelling the books pay no attentionto spaces, periods or other markings, for example, the first word is Judges, found in the first sentence, "Chief Mejud gesticulating,, the black letters give the proper word. Now find the other three dozen books. The answers will be published next week.

While motoring in Palestine I met Chief Mejud gesticulating wilding. His fez, raiment and features were odd. I never saw so dismal a chief. On market days he pumps alms from every one, a most common practice. A glance shows that he acts queerly. Excuse me for speaking so, but he was showing a crowd how they used to revel at Ionia when the brews seemed to be working. A fakir was seated on a hummock, minus hose and skirt, and wearing as comic a hat as they make. He pointed up eternally towards a rudely carved J on a high cliff. His uplifted hand was stiff and numb. Erstwhile he held it this way for days. My companion excitedly cried: See that J. Oh now I know we are near the ancient AI. Was this Ai a Holy place? From answer given elsewhere I'll say not. We asked the age of the big stone J. O eleven centuries at least. I knew that in such a jam, escort was necessary. Besides our car stuck in a rut here, so leaving the sedan I elbowed nearer the fakir. A toothless hag gained access to his side and paused to rest her self. She hinted, You have treasure? to which I retorted, Not I, moth you know and rust corrupt earthly store. Mejud expressed a wish to accompany us but I decreed, Thy party we will not annex, O dusky chief. I am at the work of tracing a cargo of lost tobacco. That's my job. To the chief's expression of sorrow over the tobacco loss I answered, "it would all have gone up in smoke any way." My brother is a tramp, (rover) B. S. from Harvard, too. His name is Eugene. Sister is nursing him now. They asked, "Where is the prodigal at?" I answered that it used to be incorrect to use "at" that way, but that the flu kept Eugene at home this year. It is really too bad, I a home-body roaming the orient, and he a tramp at home in bed.

RICKETTS ARE CURABLE AND PREVENTABLE

From the hospital and laboratories all over the world where scientists have been trying to discover a preventative or a cure for rickets, the deforming disease of early childhood, comes the good news that two simple remedies for it have been found. Both are within the reach of everybody. They are sunlight, and cod-liver oil.

Pointing out the far-reaching benefits of the discovery, Dr. J. H. M. Knox Jr., chief of the Bureau of Child Hygiene of the State Department of Health, said "The examinations that have been made at the child health conferences in the counties have shown that one out of every three white children, and seven out of every ten colored children, under two years old, suffer from this disease, which not only impairs the health, but often leads to permanent deformity of the bones.

"Babies with rickets usually have large square heads. The soft spot in the skull does not close at the normal time; the babies have head sweats even if not dressed too warmly; they are often nervous and restless; teething is frequently delayed; there is less resistance to colds and other infections; the bones are softer than normal and are easily deformed. Many of the cases of bow legs, knock knees or narrow sunken chests are the results of rickets. The pelvic bones may also be permanently deformed through the disease.

"Recent studies have shown that rickets is caused by one of two factors, or in many cases, by both together; First, the absence of sunlight in the child's environment; second, a diet that fails to supply the substances necessary for the formation of health bone structure.

"Mother's milk contains this substance, if the mother herself receives a proper diet; consequently babies who are nursed by their mothers are less likely to develop rickets than are the bottle-fed babies. It can be prevented in bottle fed babies by the use of cow's milk, modified to suit the needs of the individual child, with certain additions. After the baby is about three months old, a teaspoonful of orange juice should be given daily, an hour before one of the morning feedings. Tomato juice has similar properties, and may be substituted for the orange juice. When the baby is six months old, a little vegetable broth, made of spinach, asparagus, peas or beans, carefully chopped and cooked thoroughly, either with or without chicken, beef or mutton, then mashed and run through a sieve, should be added to the diet. The 'green' vegetables are chosen because they contain the mineral salts that are necessary for bone making. A very small quantity of the broth is given at first—not more than a teaspoonful. This is gradually increased at the baby grows older.

"Babies who are given this sort of diet, and who are kept out of doors, in the sunlight, as much as possible, are not likely to have rickets. Bright sunny rooms are necessary for general health, but indoor sunlight does not have the same effect on the bone forming tissues, that we get from the sunlight out of doors. That is another thing the scientists have tested out, and they have found that certain properties of the light—the properties that have something to do with bone formation—are lost when the light passes through our ordinary window glass.

"Cod liver oil which has also been found to be effective both as a preventative and as a cure of rickets, also contains certain substances which help toward proper bone formation. Nearly all babies can take cod liver oil either with or after their other diet. From one fourth to two teaspoonfuls a day is sufficient to prevent the disease and the same treatment will cure it, in its early stages."

Perennial War Begins To Rout Mosquitoes and Other Pests

"The time to fight mosquitoes and flies is when they are in the egg or larva stage, not after they have matured. An ounce of prevention will do the work of many fly traps and mosquito bars," declares Dr. J. Allen Patton, of Newark, N. J.

"Preventive work in the spring will wipe out the breeding places," says Dr. Patton, who is the medical director of the Prudential Insurance Company," and will, to a large extent, eliminate these menaces to the public health."

The house fly feeds and breeds on every kind of filth, and is a remarkably efficient carrier of disease. It specializes in typhoid, dysentery, Asiatic cholera and other diseases, including tuberculosis. Swatting the fly is an acceptable means of annihilating the full grown pest, but not so effective in the end as preventive measures. For it is much easier to clear away the potential breeding place for a million flies than it is to swat or catch that million after they have grown to a lively maturity.

Filling in and draining are the two most effective means of eliminating mosquito hatcheries. Where these are not practicable the periodic use of coal oil to form a film on the surface of the water is advisable.

Community effort is necessary in any campaign against the housefly or mosquito. It is not sufficient that your own stable and garbage pail are not fly incubators, and that you have no stagnant water in your yard to hatch mosquitoes. Your neighbors also must see that their yards are in condition, else your own efforts will have been wasted and they will share with you their mosquitoes and flies.

ECLIPSE OF SUN

On the twenty-fourth of January,
Came a spectacle quite contrary;
High in the sky,
A wonderful thing say'th I.

The sun rose strong but soon w weeping
For the moon in his throng was ke
ing
The rays that have funny feeling

It was a day for astronomers, scientists and such,
But to my mind they didn't learn much,
It all happened with a twinkling of the eye,
Like a frightened bird almost ready to fly.

People who missed this sight sure were dead,
Missing this great sight overhead,
To make a poem to please you I sure did try,
This is all I know, so I must say good bye.
