Eastern Shore Happenings

Rev. R. Y. Nicholson, pastor of St. Paul's M. P. Church, Cambridge, left Thursday en route for Grayson, La., where he will teach in the Louisiana Young Peoples' Conference to be held in the Methodist Protestant Church of that city.

Rev. Nicholson will teach missions, a subject in which he in intensely interested. Christian Endeavor is another topic assigned him. This is a study of work with young people from 15 to 25 years of age. The third subject which the Cambridge minister will teach is one of the most vital subjects confronting the church today. It is Stewardship for all of life. Rev. Nicholson will be absent from church two Sundays, during which time the pulpit will be supplied by Rev. G. R. Bacchus, who served St. Pauls many years ago.

Cambridge, Md., May 29.—Mayor Earle Orem, for the Chesapeake Work Boat Races Association, has invited the Southern Maryland Society of Baltimore to come here and witness the fifth annual regatta of the association on June 20.

Edward W. Thomas, chairman of the committee having in charge the annual cruise of the society, has received the invitation and will present it to his society.

George Radcliffe, president of the Eastern Shore Society, said today that this body joins in the invitation to the Southern Marylanders.

The plan of the Southern Maryland Society is to leave Baltimore aboard the City of Atlanta on Friday evening June 19, for York River.

If the invitation of the Boat Races Association is accepted, the cruise will be to the Choptank river at the same time as planned for the Virginia trip.

After the races the cruise will probably be resumed to the home of Robert Crain on the Potomac River, arriving there Sunday morning.

Already the Merchants and Manufacturers Association of Washington has written to Mayor Orem that the association will attend the event and have for its guests Governor Trinkle, of Virginia, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, a number of government officials and hope to entertain Governor Ritchie for the balance of its cruise. Governor Ritchie has accepted the invitation to be at the races.

Georgetown, Del., June 1.—Etta, 3-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Jerread, of this city, was burned about the right side, arm and face Sunday afternoon when her clothing caught fire from a match with which she and her 5-year-old brother were playing. Mrs. Jerread wrapped the child in her skirt and smothered the flames. Dr. G. F. Jones attended the child, who is expected to recover.

Seaford, Del., May 28.—A campaign is on in Sussex County to eradicate disease among cattle and to supply high-grade milk from healthy cows. At the recent session of the Delaware Legislature there was secured an appropriation of $12,500 for the purpose of continuing the work of testing cattle in the state for tuberculosis.

As a result, four veterinarians are now busily engaged in this work in this county. There is an arrangement between the State Board of Agriculture and the Federal Bureau of Animal Industry by which for each veterinarian provided by the state the Federal Government provides one.

At this time Drs. Birmingham and Sarde represent the state and Drs. Creedon and Porteus the Government.

All of these men are working without expense to the farmers whose cattle are tested, the necessary serum being supplied by the Federal Bureau of Animal Industry, under the direction of Dr. W. G. Middleton, who is inspector in charge of this work in Delaware and New Jersey, with headquarters at Trenton. 'The hope is that this county may be completely covered by these men while they are here, and that tuberculosis among the cattle may be eradicated.

The twenty-fourth anniversary of the founding of the Eastern Shore Trust Company was observed by a "Get-Together" meeting of the directors and employees, together with their friends, in the social hall of the Bethesda Church, Salisbury, at 7:45 p. m. About 500 out-of-town guests were in attendance. The Eastern Shore Trust Company, which is the largest financial agency of its kind out side of Baltimore City, representing total assets of $15,000,000, has ten banks of the Eastern Shore of Maryland and a like number on the Western Shore. All of these were well represented.

Delawares soldier dead of the World War were honored Saturday, May 23, when the new library at the University of Delafare was dedicated. This imposing edifice, built at a cost of about $400,000, including a $50,000 endowment, is a memorial to the 270 men and women of Delaware who gave up their lives in the service of their country in the World War.

This is the first State-wide recognition of the dead heroes and their war services in the way of a memorial that Delaware has given. More than 26,000 men, women and children of the state contributed to the fund with which the library was built, and these contributions came from every section of the state.

At a meeting of baseball fans last Wednesday evening, called by Athletic Director John T. Bruehl, definite plans were made for a county-wide conference in Centreville next Tuesday evening to discuss the advisability of organizing a Queen Anne's County Amateur Baseball League. At least four towns will be invitd to participate in the formation of the new baseball loop, and promoters of the movement are hopeful that all arrangements can be concluded so that the season may be opened on July 4. The towns in which teams will probably be organized are Centreville, Sudlersville, Church Hill and Stevensville. There is a possibility that it may eventually develop to a six-club circuit, to include the towns of Queenstown and Grasonville.

The Salisbury Young Men's Christian Association now have a permanent summer camp site of their own. Announcement of the purchase of "The Maryland," beautiful estate of the Melvilles, on the Nanticoke River, near Bivalve, used last year as a camp site for the organization, was made by Secretary H. C. Johnson.

The site was given the name "Camp Salisbury" by the organization last year, when more than a hundred campers registered for a period of recreation. The camp is a quarter of a mile from Bivalve and contains a two acre tract of land, improved by an 8 room house and other buildings. The house fronts upon the river where crabs and fish abound. An excellent bathing beach of several hundred feet goes with the property.

Sallie's Temptations

SALLIE FINDS HERSELF IN A NEW SITUATION

Morning in Miami and a new day of blue and gold brilliance. Ellie and I sat alone on the open terrace. The others had gone down for a swim in the dazzling ocean, while still others had strolled off to one of the secluded nooks of the extensive gardens.

"What's up?" Ellie demanded, "All I've heard is a whisper about your breezing in at some time in the early, pearly dawning. Mrs. Divine was about as communicative as a pound of cheese when I asked at breakfast about our fair Sallie."

In spite of all that had happened I was forced to smile at Ellie's amusing phraseology.

"Oh, the less said, the better, I suppose," I answesed, wishing to foget all about the episode with Warren Fisher. I would not have to see him again for I was sure he would not follow out his intentions of attending the house party while I was on it.

"Oh, I beg your pardon," she exclaimed in a most exaggerated manner, 'can you really beat it—me in the role of the prying scandalmonger? Really, Sport, I'm sorry, it was not idle curiosity that prompted me to pester you with abominable questions. Never you mind whttever it is—or whatever you did, it's all right with me and I'm for you!"

She came over and gave me an affectionate pat on the shoulder.

"Oh, Ellie, you're so fine and loyal. I don't know what I'd do without you. It wasn't that I did not want to tell you everything, it's just so joy-killing that I hate to blow your candle out even for a few minutes."

"I may be wrong, but I had an idea under this permanent wave of mine that friends were useful for just such a purpose."

"Well, I'll tell you. It's really very simple after it's all over, but I went through the devil's own time with a man last night. He thought I was—well—"

"A little prairie flower?" prompted Ellie.

"Uh-hum," I nodded, "and only after a strenuous argument which ended in me taking to my heels, could I convince him that I was not."

"Never mind Kid, it's all over now and it happens in the best of families. It's part of a girls' education." Ellie was cynical. I forgot my own worries momentarily and asked for the reason.

"Oh, just a disappointment. I got a telegram a minute ago from—oh well, from the suitor I told you was going to join the party," a pause, then, "business has ialled him to other places."

"But to get back to your case, Sallie, are you going to let that silly experience dampen your usual dashing spirit?"

"I don't know yet how I feel about it, somehow, I'm sick of the whole business. This thing has sorter taken the starch out of me, Ellie. Of course, I've made a few such silly mistakes before, but this one was worst—the man was much older, an there was a sort of deliberateness about it that was grossly common."

It never occurred to Ellie to question me in regard to the identity of the man to whom I was referring. She was an ideal friend. Her attitude gave me to understand that if I chose to tell her—well and good—and if I didn't, it was—well and good also. That was Ellie.

I refrained from revealing the name of Warren Fisher, not because I thought he deserved any consideration, but I instinctively shrank from dragging in another person on whom to shove the blame for something that had been the result of my own indiscretion.

The maid appeared and said that Mrs. Divine would like to speak with Miss Mitchell. I sat basking in the sunlight. It soothed my nerves and gave me a feeling of complete relaxation.

In just a few minutes Ellie returned. Her face was dark and forbidding.

"Why, Ellie, what is it?" I started up from the swing in which we had been sitting.

"Damn her narrow, little mind and soul!"

I knew then that the interview had been frightfully unpleasant. I likewise knew that the thing that upset Ellie had to do with my being at the villa. We are all more psychic than we realize and as a rule, we never go wrong on these first telepathic impressions.

"Now, Ellie, you might as well be perfectly frank about it. You can't hurt my feelings. What did Mrs. Divine say to you about me that left you in such a fury—why, Ellie, old girl, look—you're trembling all over."

" I suppose I'll have to tell you. I'd want you to under similar conditions."

"Of course you would. You're a perfect brick. Come and sit here," and taking her hand, I drew her forward.

"No, siree—not in this house. Not in any swing or chair owned by that heartless piece of alabaster."

"Careful, Ellie, you're talking about our hostess," I warned. After all, we had broken bread with Mrs. Divine and like the Mohammedans that rite alone should keep us loyal.
