Love of Money.

The true miser loves to look at his gold, in which he finds more beauty than elsewhere exists in the universe, consequently when Sir William Smith, a wealthy English miser, was, at seventy years of age, deprived of his sight, he felt it to be a terrible affliction. He was pursuaded by Taylor, the celebrated oculist, to be couched; who was, by agreement, to have sixty guineas if he restored his patient to any degree of sight. Taylor succeeded in his operation, and Sir William was enabled to read and write without the aid of spectacles, during the rest of his life. But no sooner was the sight restored, than the baronet began to regret that his agreement had been for so large a sum; he felt no joys as others would have felt, but grieved and sighed over the loss of his sixty guineas! His thoughts were how to cheat the oculist;—he pretended he had only a glimmering, and could see nothing distinctly; for which reason the bandage on his eyes was continued a month longer than the usual time.—Taylor was deceived by these misrepresentations, and agreed to compound the bargain, and accepted twenty guineas instead of sixty. Yet Sir William was an old bachelor, and had no one to care and provide for. At the time Taylor attended him, he had a large estate, an immense sum in stocks, and thirty thousand dollars in the house. When the government desired to borrow a large sum of money from the immensely wealthy miser, Foscue, he refused to loan upon the plea of poverty. Fearing, however, that some of his neighbors, among whom he is very unpopular, would report his immense wealth to the government, he applied his ingenuity to discover some effectual way of hiding his gold, should they attempt to institute a search to ascertain the truth or falsehood of his plea. With great care and secrecy he dug a deep cave in his cellar; to this receptacle for his treasure he descended by a ladder, and to the trapdoor he attached a spring lock, so that on shutting, it would fasten of itself. By-and-by the miser disappeared; inquiries were made; the house was searched; the woods were explored, and the ponds were dragged, but no Foscue could they find; and gossips began to conclude that the miser had fled to some part where, by living incognito, he could be free from the hands of the government. Some time passed on; the house in which he had lived was sold, and workmen were busily engaged in its repair. In the progress of their work they met with the door of the secret cave, with the key in the lock outside. They drew back the door, and descended with a light. The first object upon which the light was reflected, was the gastly body of Foscue, the miser, and scattered around him were heavy bags of gold, and ponderous chests of untold treasure; a candlestick beside him on the floor. This worshipper of mammon had gone into his cave to pay his devoirs to his golden god, and became a sacrifice to his devotion!

Cork-leg Christianity.

Walking with a friend on Chestnut street a few days ago, a young man passed us, whose style and manner immediately attracted our attention. He was well-dressed, fine-looking and well-behaved. Something, however, was evidently wrong. He did not exactly limp, nor was he awkward in his steps. He did not even carry a cane. But at the same time there was a certain stiffness in his gate that was unpleasant to the eye. This natural ease in walking was absent. In short, he was artificial. Our companion was acquainted with this individual, and promptly explained to us the cause of the whole matter. The young man had a cork leg.

The Church of Christ in our day, to a certain extent, is laboring under a similar disadvantage. Much of the professed Christianity around us is well enough as far as external appearances are concerned, but within it lacks heart and vitality.—When we pierce within the outer surface, we find instead of flesh and bones—simply cork. To those who possess this spurious religion—or appearance of religion—it seems to compare quite favorably with any other. They become so accustomed to it that, like our cork-legged friend, they do not realize that their walk is stiff and artificial. But the world is quick and shrewd, and can easily distinguish between the true and the false, the genuine and the counterfeit. By the world we mean those who care little or nothing for the religion of Jesus Christ. We may very easily deceive those within the church, whose judgments of our life and character will, or ought to be charitable, but it is difficult to mislead those who stand outside, silently but carefully looking on.

It is well enough to say to this class:—"Judge not," for they will judge. "Judge not," forms no part of their creed, for the Bible is not their law of life. They have heard that religion is desirable, among other reasons because it makes a man purer and nobler and better, and the world looks to the professed Christian for the proof of all it claims for itself. They detect the inconsistencies of the Christian far sooner than his consistencies, because it accords far better with their plan. So, after all, we are our brothers' keepers, and cannot be too careful how we walk. Hence, what we especially need is less cork in our religion and more real life; that is, less of the sham and more of the substance. Cork religion means not only treason to Christ, but hypocrisy in the eyes of the world.—It is a terrible thing for any man to put "a stumbling block, or an occasion to fail, in his brother's way."—Sower.

The happiness of life consists, like the day, not in single flashes of light, but in one continued mild serenity. The most beautiful period of the heart's existence is in this calm equable light, even although it be only moonshine of twilight. Now the mind alone can obtain for us this heavenly cheerfulness and peace.

To the Sick.

A great many are now suffering with cold, coughs, and other ailments, which, if not promptly attended to, may result in an incurable disease. For all diseases of the throat, breast and lungs, bronchial or asthmatic affections, Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry is a pleasant and certain cure. The oldest and best remedy. It promotes expectoration, and removes all diseased matter which obstructs the lungs, the ulceration is healed, and the sufferer restored to perfect health. It is nourishing and strengthening, and for disturbed rest at night, its use will give sweet repose. If the bowels are costive, or liver disordered, take at first a few doses of Swayne's Tar and Sarsaparilla Pills, which will evacuate the bowels, and is of vital importance, relieve the congested liver, and remove all billiousness. Then follow with Swayne's Wild Cherry Syrup, and health, strength and happiness is sure to be the result.

SAVED HIS LIFE.

A Remarkable Cure

Was that of Edward H. Hamson, Engineer at George Sweeny's Pottery, 1334 Ridge Avenue, Philadelphia. He had a violent cough, night sweats, sore throat, great weakness, spit at different times a pint of blood, gave up all hope of recovery Through the use of "Dr. Swayne's Wild Cherry Syrup" became a sound and hearty man, and remains so to this day, although over twenty years have elapsed since he was cured.

☞ We are permitted to refer to the following gentlemen who have experienced great benefit, and used "Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry" in their family for many years.
