THE FARMER'S COLUMN

Stir the Soil.

All growing crops should be frequently cultivated during the period of their early growth. The more hoeing or harrowing the better while the plants are young and before the roots are spread through the ground. Plants with long, fibrous roots, like Indian corn, should not be worked too late in the season. Stir the soil frequently and well in the early part of the season, and as it approached maturity lessen the depth of culture and 'lay it by' when it begins to put forth shoots for the seed. Such things as have but few fibrous roots, like beets, turnips, melons, &., may be cultivated to maturity provided the implement does not come in contact with the main roots.

This frequent stirring of the soil promotes growth by allownig the roots to spread more freely into the soil and also by attracting moisture from the earth and atmosphere. The earth is a great reservoir of water which constantly tends to rise to the surface and become evaporated into the air. This process goes on very rapidly during the heat of the day and in the passage upward the plants absorb it. A mellow and well pulverized surface soil promotes this evaporation. Besides this the vapor that arises from the earth under the power of the blazing sun is in part condensed by the cooler atmosphere of the night and falls back to the surface of the earth in the form of dew, which is much more readily absorbed by a well stired and porous soil. Good farmers, therefore keep the soil in the best possible condition by the frequent use of plow, harrow and hoe. Indeed it is not worth while to expect a crop of any kind to grow in a hard, impervious and badly cultivated soil. Our method is to get the surface of corn fields and all other head crops into the proper condition as early in the season as possible, and keep them so without regard to the number of times the plow harrow, or hoe has to be used to effect it. We wonld harrow three times a week, or even three times a day is necessary to bring about the proper condition of the surface soil early in the season.

SIZE OF BARRELS.—A President of an agricultural society calls attention to the fact that there are in a standard legal barrel only 100 quarts, while the ordinary flour barrel, most in use among farmers in the sale of potatoes and apples, contains nearly one-eight more. Farmers sell their produce in flour barrels, and merchants transfer the same to standard barrels, making a profit on quantity as well on the price. In the sale of 800 barrels of potatoes from a farm, the proprietor loses 100 barrels, worth $250, for which he might as well be paid. The middleman, not the consumer, profits by this. Farmers, see to it that you employ the 100 quart barrels hereafter.

TOMATO—CELERY—HEALTHFUL.—There is no more healthful vegetable raised in our gardens than the Tomato; it is anti-billious, having a good effect upon the liver, stomach, and kidneys; the writer knows it from long experience and careful observation; the free use of tomatoes—eating fresh ones in their season, and ketchup or preserved ones in other portions of the year, is sure, in most cases, to cure dyspepsia and a bilious stomach; while freely eating them does much to prevent those distressing maladies. Too many cannot be raised, and it is as easy to raise them almost as Potatoes.

FOWLS of all kinds are very fond of charcoal, and will eat it with great relish if properly prepared. Pounded charcoal is not in the shape in which fowls usually find their food, and consequently is not very enticing to them. To please their palate the charcoal should be in pieces of about the size of grains of corn, and if these are strewn around their quarters they will be readily eat thereof. Corn burnt on the cob placed before them makes a marked improvement in their health, as is shown by the brighter color of their combs and their producing a greater average of eggs to the flock than before.

VALUE OF HENS.—A curious statement has been made an published in a French paper in regard to hens. It reckons the number of hens in France at 40,000,000 valued at $20,000,000. Of these about one-fifth are killed annually for the market. There is an annual net production of 80,000,000 chickens, which in market yield $24,000,000. The extra value for capons, fattened hens and the like, is put at $2,200,000. The production of eggs is reckoned that the value of hens, chickens and eggs sold in the markets of France is $80,000,000.

ALL growing plants ought to be often stirred by the hoe or rake, to kill grass and keep the ground light and pliable. Water if necessary. These suggestions apply to melons and all vegetable vines, and indeed to all plants that are growing except such as are maturing.

Celery is known to be an effective nervine, and freely eating that beautiful vegetable promotes easy sleep, and tends to a quiet of the nervous system. Let it be raised in abundance.

TAINE says: "Four varieties in society: lovers, the ambitious, observers and fools. The fools are the happiest."
