Bypass is Still Discussed In Church Hill

A spokesman for the State Roads Commission said that a proposed bypass for Church Hill, which would take care of the increased north-south traffic due to the Bay Bridge, is still under consideration.

A definite decision may not be made for another two weeks, the spokesman said. The State Roads Commission recently took a six-month option on a half-acre piece of ground owned by the Queen Anne's County school Board which would be needed for building the bypass.

If it is built, United States Route 213 would go to the west of the town and connect with State Route 300 at an extension of that highway Route 300 leads to Delaware.

Although a few merchants still oppose a bypass, which would take traffic away from the center of town there does not appear to be the opposition to the road that was reported that construction would cost about $1,000,000.

E. Clyde Walls, Church Hill business man, said that when a representative of the State Roads Commission told Church Hill residents that the cost would be near $350,000 opposition receded.

"Many residents would like to get rid of the traffic," said Walls.

Mr. Walls said Church Hill residents were also told that if the bypass were not built now it could not be constructed until 1965.

Mrs. Thomas W. Fleming, Maryland Federation president and resident of St. Michaels, will head a guest list that includes the executive committee of the state federation, the state chairman of Junior activities and the editor of the "Maryland Clubwomen."

A musical program has been arranged by the St. Michaels Woman's Club, hostesses for the day.

Registration will begin at 10 a.m. at Sardis Methodist Church. Mrs. James M. Wales, president of the hostess club, has notified Mrs. Hall that the commissioners of St. Michaels are allowing free parking for the day to all attending.

2 Queen Anne's Spotters Post In Operation

The Queen Anne's County Civil Defense organizations has two airplane spotter posts operating regularly now, and is working to put the other three posts in the county into operation.

Allan B. Lane, alternate Civil Defense director, said the Barclay post had been in service about two months, "almost full time."

Centreville's posts have also been operating two months, part time. The number of hours being served there is increasing.

Grasonville is about 45 per cent organized, Stevensville held organizational meeting and Church Hill is to begin organization soon.

Mr. Lane said the county organization is working on one area at a time instead of trying to put the whole county system into egect at once.

He said 160 volunteers per post were needed and that there had been "very hearty co-operation" from individuals and business concerns.

The Civil Defense organization, with co-operation of the county commissioners and the county fire company, is also purchasing radio communication equipment.

When the equipment is installed, eighteen fire trucks will have mobile radio units. The one bast station will be in the Civil Defense office.

County Residents Ask for Traffic Signal Near Wye Mills

Residents of Queen Anne's county have started a new campaign to get the State Roads Commission to install a traffic light at the intersection of U.S. 50 and U.S. 213, just north of Wye Mills.

Two out-of-State cars crashed there last Saturday, with three passengers injured and the cars heavily damaged.

It was the third serious accident there in two months. Three persons were killed in an accident at the spot Labor Day.

The intersection is about 15 miles east of the Chesapeake Bay Bridge. Heavy crossbay traffic to and from the Eastern Shore towns and resorts tangles there with traffic to and from other points farther north on the shore.

The Queenstown Lions Club has petitioned David M. Nichols, member of the State Roads Commission to put a traffic light at the junction.

State Senator Edward Turner, of Queen Anne's county, has asked the commission's traffic department to survey the intersection again to determine if a light is needed. The commission said it would.

The commission previously surveyed the junction and reported the amount and character of the traffic did not necessitate a light. It did order the installation of additional "slow" and "stop" signs.

Two More Polio Cases In County Sends Total to 11

Two more polio cases in Queen Anne's County were announced over the weekend by Dr. Caroline H. Callison, county health officer, bringing to 11 the number reported this year.

Dr. Calliso noted that these were the first reported in two weeks and said that with the advent of colder weather, the instances of polio should decrease.

Both of the latest cases are youths from Grasonville, but not in the same neighborhood in the town.

Van Whittington, 8, son of Mrs. Bernice Whittington, was taken to City Hospital in Baltimore, suffering "some paralysis," according to the report. There are no other children in the home.

Saturday, John Jones, 4, son of Mrs. Georgia Matilda Jones, came down with "some weakness," but no paralysis. He is confined to the nome. There are four other children in the house.

This makes a total of seven children in Baltimore hospitals and four remaining at home in the county.

It is the worst polio year on record for Queen Ann'es County.

The youth, Robert Usilton, near Sudlersville, pulled out of the driveway of Edward Frazier into the path of the truck driven by Charles Lofland, Sudlersville, according to reports from state police.
