TAKE CARE when installing TV antenna

Make Sure your TV Antenna can't fall on power lines

Here's what can happen if your antenna should fall across the electric utility circuit:

Electric shock and serious injury to any person coming in contact with the antenna

Electric shock and serious injury to any person touching the television set

Damage and probable destruction of television set

Interruption of electric service with danger to life and property resulting from darkened street and traffic lights.

PLAY SAFE

- Have a skilled TV serviceman install your outdoor antenna so that it can't fall or swing on power lines
- Use the best and strongest materials capable of withstanding high winds and heavy coatings of ice.
- Choose a location for the antenna which is a safe distance from overhead utility lines
- Never string antenna guy wires over or close to power lines

By observing these simple precautions for a safe antenna installation you will safeguard lives and property
