My dear Nannie —

It is now just five o'clock in the evening. I have just had a telegram from Rosa, telling me of Aunt Emily's death. I am indeed glad that I am not able to go to pay her the last respects but even if I was well enough I could not reach there in time. It would be a long tiresome travel, and one I am afraid that I am not strong enough to stand, just now.
I have had something of a headache all day yesterday. It is better to day. I am better of that, but have been in my room all day.
Poor dear Aunt Emily. I have out of her misery. For so many years, she has been a great sufferer
