Anne Arundel Tour Set for Sat., Nov. 6

On Saturday afternoon, November 6, at 2o'clock, members of Historic Annapolic, Inc., will conduct a special tour of about a dozen unfamiliar Colonial houses and other sites located in Anne Arundel County between Route 214 (the Ceneral Avenue routs from Washington, D. C.), and the Severn River, especially in the region at the head ofSouth River, reaching as far west as Route 301.

Historic houses and other landmarks in this region will be visited, and their history will be explained by qaulified guides. Many of these landmarks are comparatively unknown. Because of the large number to be visited, they will be viewed from outside. Camera enthusiasts, however, will be given opportunities to take photographs of interesting exterior aspects of the houses and their surroundings at a time when, it is expected, autumn foilage will be at its best.

Among building to be visited will he the first free school building established in Anne Arundel County, built during 1724; the birthplace of Johns Hopkins, founder of the university which bears his name; another Hopkins house, which stands on the original land grant; houses associated with ethe early history of the Baldwin and Warfield families; and others having either unusual histories or noteworthy colonial features that are still preserved. Knowledge of these will reveal much concerning the average homes of colonial citizens, and life on early farms where the real wealth of Anne Arundel County was then produced.

Persons wishing to take this tour [illegible] own car may do so at [illegible] Maps and descriptive [illegible] will be furnished each ticket [illegible]der.

About two hours will be requqired for the complete tour.

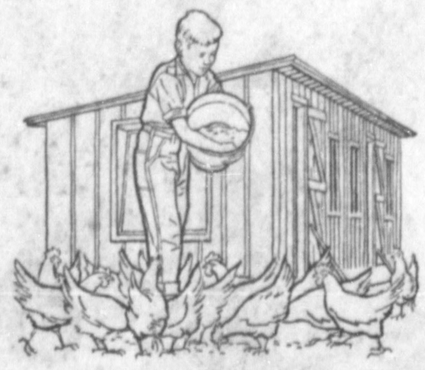
"Oh, Jim, let me drive it!"

Sally is just as thrilled with the new car as Jim is. She likes its looks; he likes its get-up-and-go. And speaking of improvements, did you know that today more than 75,000 telephones are in use in the rural areas of Maryland we serve? More farm families than ever before enjoy telephone service, and your telephone company is working hard to make it even more valuable and useful.



Farm hand—1954 model

Tommy is a big help around the farm. He feeds the pigs and chickens, gives the dog his breakfast and runs errands for Mom. On a farm, co-operation is the key word. Party-line telephone service is good because of it, too. When you share-and-share-alike, and when you hang up carefully after every call, it gives you and others on your line more value—more for your telephone dollar.
