By-Products are Important

Everyone has heard the old saying that the meat packers "save all of the pig but the squeal." That's just about literally true. All manner of non-edible py-product are processed and sold. The revenue they bring to the packers helps give producers a better price for their livestock, and consumers a lower price for their meat.

Any change in the by-product market situation, as a result is an important matter. That has happened in the case of hides. Over recent years their value has sharply declined—and this has had a tremendous effect on the price packers could afford to pay for steers.

A spokesman for a packing company described what has happened. In 1910 the price of steer hides amounted to about 13½ per cent of the live cost of the steer. In 1954, the hide's value was down to about three per cent of the live cost. In addition, the handling costs have gone up—labor and salt has expanded without a corresponding increase in domestic demand for leather, and this too has resulted in downward pressure on prices. The only bright spot has been an increase in the sale of hides abroad.

The spokesman then urged a three-way approach to the problem. First, is research in all phases of the hide and leather industry, directed toward improving the quality of the product and finding new uses for it. Second, is increased advertisiny and promotion to acquaint consumers with the superior value of leather for many uses. Third, is to modernize the methods of handling hides. This, it is hoped, would materially change the picture for the better.

Where There's No Stock Exchange

There used to be a stock exchange in Russia. But there isn't any more.

This is symbolic of the difference between the Russian and the American systems.

Under communism, or any similar idealogy, the state owns and runs everything. It decides what factories shall be built or not built, what goods shall be produced or not produced, what services shall be given the people and what shall be denied them. The state does all the allocating of money and resources and manpower. The people themselves have nothing to say about It. They can like it or lump it. And, of course, they can protest—if they don't mind salt mines and firing squads.

Under capitalism, in a free nation, individuals and groups of individuals build and operate the factories and other sources of goods and services. They invest their savings voluntarily, without coercion. They can buy or sell when and what they want, in a free market. That's why stock exchanges exist—to provide places where buyers and sellers can in effect, meet and conclude transactions. And the stock exchanges exist to serve the many, not just the few.

If you question that last statement, here's the proof. Of America's 7,500,000 stock owners, 331.6 per cent have annual incomes of less than $5,000; 44.4 per cent have $5,000 to $10,000, and only 24 per cent have $10,000 or more.

Old Raskob Land Placed On Sale

Sixty acre of waterfront property of Pioneer Point Farms has been divided into 120 building sites and is now offered for sale to the public, the development to be known as Mallard Point.

Just five miles west of Centreville on the Chester River and Grove Creek, the development has graded streets with street signs already installed. One home is under construction at this time and several lots have been purchased.

Pioneer Point Farms, one of the more fabulous showplaces on the astern Shore, was developed in the 1920s by the late John J. Raskob. The estate is now the permanent home of R.J. Funkhouser, millionaire industrialist, internationally known for his restoration of early colonial homes.

Mallard Point is a portion of the estate which was formerly known as Recovery and lies between the main house, Hartefeld House, on the Chester River, and the horse barn, which is to the south around on Grove Creek. It may be reached by hard-surfaced road.

The development will share the estate's city-like high pressure water system with fire hydrants and the artesian well water supply is expected to be ample for all purposes.

All lots have 100-foot frontage and range in price from $5,000, directly on the water to $1,350 each.
