...ngerfest a... ...n ideal convention city and, that her business men are true men of business, who understand the art of advertising their business, and the advantages of the city to accommodate large crowds, and to draw them to her gates by reasonable charges and extortionate rates on account of strangers. It is now up to the press of the state to assist the business men of Baltimore in their efforts to advertise the state and city.

The numerous lynchings throughout the country has caused wide discussion of the question in the press. Mr. P. Donnelly, of Baltimore, seems to master the situation in a letter to the Baltimore Sun, in which he cites a case near Baltimore a few years ago, which we think is applicable to other counties in Maryland. He writes in part:

"An associate judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, in a recent address made in the West, spoke very strongly against lynching, classing it as the worst form of murder and compared to which communism, nihilism or red republicanism faded into insignificance. Like a skillful lawyer, the eminent judge spoke only from one side of the question, namely, law, and left the other side—justice—quietly alone. For those who may be inclined to talk so much of the law being outraged when a lynching case takes place it would be well to recall an outrage which took place not far from the boundary line of Baltimore city only a few years ago.

A young lady was outraged by a negro under circumstances of the most revolting nature. The wretch was captured and at the earnest solicitation of the young lady's father was saved from lynching. The father of the lady said he had full confidence in the law and was satisfied the law would give the villian his just deserts. It was a case of misplaced confidence, as the sequel proved. The trial came on and the young lady on the witness stand had to answer questions of the most delicate nature before a crowded courtroom. A young lawyer was assigned for the defense, and the court allowed him the widest latitude. All sorts of technicalities were raised, and endless amount of exceptions noted—enough to leave the young lawyer for the defense sufficient ground to threaten to carry the case to the Court of Appeals. And thus the first steps in the case from a legal standpoint ended in a farce. Justice, however, was determined to have a say, and as there was every likelihood [illegible] the young lady having to undergo the same examination again in [illegible] friends, burning with i[illegible] tion at the law's del[illegible] wretch, to do wh[illegible] son was storin[illegible]

To prevent [illegible] be no delay on t[illegible] law. Quickness of [illegible] cause people to [illegible] some[illegible] the dilly-[illegible] will hold [illegible] promptitude."
