WASHINGTON LETTER.

Our Correspondent Writes of the Special Happenings at the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, JUNE 23, 1906—Nearly the whole of a long cabinet session this week was devoted to discussing the contemplated prosecution of the Standard Oil Company on the strength of the report that has been made by Commissioner of Corporations Garfield on the discriminations practiced in the oil business, particularly in the transportation of the oil by the railroads. It has been announced that the prosecution will be instituted and special attorneys for the prosecution have been retained. Then the question of how the Standard is going to meet the situation. This will not be the first time the giant company has been in the courts, and it has always had money enough to buy the best brains on the market and, thus effectually defeat any attempt on the part of the government to curb it or exact even approximate justice from it. The chances are that the prosecution will be about as great a farce as any other of the prosecutions of the Standard that have been instituted, but it will be rather interesting to see what sort of a farce it will be.

There are rumors of prosecution flying very thick just now. The Interstate Commerce Commission promises to have something hot served up after they get their testimony arranged for the first volume of their report on the coal and oil carrying railroads. It is said that they are going gunning for a railroad president. It was somewhat significant that none of the railroad presidents were subpoenaed to appear before the commission during its recent sittings. There was towards the end of the hearings a general invitation issued for any railroad presidents who desired, to come forward and tell all they knew. It appeared that none of them wished, for none of them came forward. There was no legal command to appear served on them and, thus, if there should be any proceedings instituted, and, if more miraculous still, there should be a conviction, they could not escape by way of the "immunity bath" route.

The hearings of the Interstate Commerce Commission are now concluded for the summer and while there is not much ground still to be covered, the first section of their report will probably not be ready till fall. The last witness they had on the stand this week was an interesting old gentleman named Gardner, one of the vice-presidents of four coal companies owned by the Erie railroad. He said that the Erie owned the four companies as they drew from them about half of the 3,000,000 tons of coal that they consumed each year. And then he went on to tell the commission a few things from the railroad point of view about owning coal mines. He said he had been an expert in the coal business since the days of the old Hayden survey and that he had worked in the same capacity for the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, the Rio Grande Western and some other roads—that he was now working for the Erie. He was a consulting expert. He said the road depended primarily on [illegible]el supply being regular, certain [illegible]heap. This he said could be ac[illegible]lished only by the railroads own[illegible]heir own mines or the bulk of [illegible] and that, so far as he was con[illegible] he had advised the Erie to [illegible] lands as soon as they [illegible] a reasonable price. [illegible] see what was to prevent their doing it so long as they used the coal for their own consumption. This was a rather warm parting shot for the commission and they will now have the summer to think over this phase of the situation and adjust their report accordingly.

There is a life and death struggle going on in the House between the forces of the Pure Food bill and the lobby of the adulterated food manufacturers. This is a pretty fight. It is interesting to watch and, the wonder is, that any honest vendor of food feels that he can afford to fight the measure that is being put forward. The bill does not prescribe what the people shall eat or what they shall buy. It merely insists that when the "finest imported olive oil" is really cottonseed, the label should say so. Similarly it provides that when the can of vegetables you get at the corner grocery or at the department store weighs only two pounds and a-half, the label should state the weight and not let the customer be deluded into thinking he is getting a three pound can for 27 cents "reduced from 28."

There was a great show in the House this week when Representative Mann undertook to run a small grocery store of his own and demonstrated to the House members some of the impositions that were practiced on them. He had bottles of gin and whiskey, Marischino cherries, olive oil, pepper, canned meats and vegetables, flavoring extracts, coffee and breakfast foods. He showed them to the House, measured them and showed that they were short of weight and bulk, showed also how they were dyed and treated with chemicals and in short, made a pretty good showing for a number of firms [illegible] producing business. [illegible]he samples that he had [illegible] that the average house[illegible]s at least once a week [illegible]roceryman or eats at the [illegible]estaurants. He said there [illegible]ection to anybody who [illegible] them or eating formal[illegible]ax or anything else that [illegible] But what he did object [illegible]g the doctored food [illegible] the public as the "very [illegible]est" in its line with [illegible] label to show that the [illegible].

Weeds are not only noxous in themselves; they beget other evils. They foster slovenliness. A big patch of weeds in a back yard, vacant lot or an alley creates an irresistible desire in the careless domestic to throw old tin cans among them, to empty among their concealing leaves the garbage that should be carted away. Such things have the germs of contagion and death. Besides they are nasty, they are a part of the weed system. Nice customs abhor them. A town to be clean and wholesome and attractive must be cleared of pestilent things. Citizens should cut the weeds. Then there will be fewer tin cans, heaps of ashes and piles of routine garbage to mar the appearance and impair the health of a fine town.

TEACHERS' MEETING.

An Invitation Extended to the National Educational Asso., to Meet in Baltimore.

Fully 1,000 public school teachers from every section of Maryland began their thirty-ninth annual meeting at Ocean City Tuesday night. Of these 1,000 teachers, 800 were women.

The teachers are so infatuated with Ocean City that they have started a movement to erect an auditorium there for their use at annual gatherings. It is proposed to have a large central hall for general meetings and smaller halls for sectional meetings. Briefly the plan is to utilize the funds now devoted to county institutes to the establishment and maintenance of a summer school where teachers can acquire the latest methods in their work. It is suggested that a faculty be on duty throughout the summer.

The fact is becoming generally recognized among teachers and educators in general that the county institutes are not proving as beneficial as their original promoters had expected. These institutes are wholly local affairs. Teachers from the rural districts visit the county seat once a year and there listen to what are frequently long and tiresome dissertations on how to teach, what to teach and why to teach, etc. The teachers are not always entertained or instructed by these discussions. They would ofter prefer to be at home. These institutes in most cases, are devoid of social features which are dear to the heart of the women teachers. They are frequently fully developed bores. In place of these institutes it is proposed to have a summer school.

M. B. Nichols, president of the Talbot County School Commissioners, protested vehemently against the erection of the auditorium in Ocean City as long as the resort, he said, is in the grasp of the B. C. & A. R. R. "The railroad company," said Mr. Nichols, "discriminates against the public school teachers of the Eastern Shore. It is an imposition. I object to such an imposition upon principle. From Easton to Ocean City and return its tickets to the teachers' meeting are $2.35 and $3 for the round trip from Baltimore. Is not that discrimination?"

The teachers at their meeting on Wednesday extended an invitation to the National Educational Association to hold its next annual convention in Baltimore. Such a move has been on foot for sometime and has been in the hands of State Superintendent Stephens and others. In anticipation of the success of their efforts they had a bill passed by the last General Assembly permitting the use of the Fifth Regiment Armory for a gathering similar to that of the National Educational Association. The law is now operative and, if the national teachers go to Baltimore, the armory will be at their disposal. Dr. Stephens and a delegation of teachers had intended to urge upon the National Association the selection of Baltimore for the next convention city. They had planned to go to San Francisco; but the earthquake came and the National Educational Association did not go to the stricken city. Its next meeting place will be selected by the executive committee. The Marylanders will bring their efforts to bear upon that committee.

The meeting closed at noon yesterday. The verdict is that the meeting was the most successful and the most largely attended in the history of the association. It is safe to say that the teachers will meet at Ocean City again next year. The meeting place will be selected by the executive committee.

Each Commissioner Has a Man.

The county commissioners have not yet been able to agree upon a deputy shellfish commissioner for Queen Anne's county. Two ballots were taken at their meeting on Tuesday and the votes resulted as follows: Commissioner John C. Smith for W. Edward Tarr, of the Fifth district; Commissioner Charles L. Goodhand for W. E. Taylor, of the Fourth district; Commissioner John H. Evans for John F. Godwin, of the Second district. Under the provisions of the Haman-Seth oyster law, passed at the last session of the Legislature, each tidewater county is entitled to a deputy shellfish commissioner, to be appointed by the county commissioners, whose duty it is to assist the shellfish commissioners in surveying and locating the natural oyster rocks in the waters of their county. They will only be in actual service when the waters of their county are being surveyed and will receive a salary of $5 per day for every day they are engaged in the work.

The Maryland Shellfish Commission has purchased the steamer Thos. L. Worthley. The object of the purchase is to supply living quarters for the commission and the surveyors that are to chart off the waters of the Chesapeake bay pursuant to the recent laws passed by the Legislature of Maryland.

Medford M. Rasin, Chestertown, Disappears.

Med. M. Rasin disappeared from his vessel, the gasoline steamer Bertie Tull, off the mouth of Worton Creek, during a trip from Baltimore Wednesday night, and it is feared that he has been drowned. The news was carried to his wife in Chestertown by N. Lieberman, with whom Mr. Rasin had been associated in business at Melitota and a hand on the boat. The steamer left her wharf in Baltimore Wednesday night for the return trip to Buck Neck and Mr. Rasin, according to the statement of Capt. Ben. Cosden, boarded the vessel in the city for the trip. Capt. Cosden stated Thursday morning that he and Mr. Rasin were sitting in the pilot-house until a few minutes before the vessel reached Poole's Island and they were discussing the prospect for the season's freight traffic. Just as they were about to enter the mouth of Worton creek, Mr. Rasin left the pilot-house presumably to go to bed. Capt. Cosden says that is the last he saw of Mr. Rasin and, when the boat tied up at Buck Neck wharf early Thursday morning Mr. Rasin was missing. A search was immediately instituted but he could not be found nor had any of the deckhands seen him leave the boat.

Law For Motor Craft Carrying Passengers.

Notice is given by the Board of Inspectors of steam vessels of the following amendment of the Act of Congress regulating the working of motor craft in the waters of the United States: "All vessels of 15 gross tons or less, propelled in whole or in part by gas, gasoline, petroleum, naphtha fluid or electricity, and carrying passengers for hire, shall carry one life preserver of the sort prescribed by the regulations of the board of supervising inspectors for every passenger carried, and no vessel while carrying passengers shall be operated or navigated except in charge of a person duly licensed for such service by the local board of inspectors. No examination shall be required as a condition of obtaining such a license, and any such license shall be revoked or suspended by the local board of inspectors for misconduct, gross negligence, recklessness in navigation, intemperance or violation of law on the part of the holder, and if revoked the person holding such license shall be incapable of obtaining another for one year from the date of revocation."

And now, in New Hampshire, we find it the best medicine in the world for coughs, colds, bronchial troubles and all lung diseases. Guaranteed by J. S. Denny. 50c and $1. Trial bottle free.

How to Break up a Cold.

It may be a surprise to many to learn that a severe cold can be completely broken up in one or two days' time. The first symptoms of a cold are a dry, loud cough, a profuse watery discharge from the nose, and a thin, white coating on the tongue. When Chamberlain's Cough Remdy is taken every hour on the first appearance of these symptoms, it counteracts the effect of the cold and restores the system to a healthy condition within a day or two. "June Drop" Will Leave Us Plenty Fruit.

The "June drop" the last and most serious hardship and crucial season through which the peach crop must pass, is now on and peaches are falling from the trees, from those on the topmost boughs to those near the earth. The drop is this year very heavy, but the crop is also extremely large, and by growers even a heavy drop is looked upon as something beneficial, as a pruning for the trees and relieves them of the burden of nourishing superfluous fruit.

The condition of the fruit crop is always a question of lively interest, and discussion of the present prospects is constantly going on among all classes of citizens, and among town residents quite as much as among the fruit growers themselves. From all that can be gathered, it is evident that most varieties of peaches in well kept orchards still have enough fruit for a heavy yield. Some of the tender varieties may be rather shy in certain localities but, unless very unusual conditions prevail, the peach crop will be the largest in a quarter of a century.

The fate of the apple crop or rather its size, is still something uncertain. Some of the largest orchards however, are full. The twig blight, which is identically the same thing as the pear blight starting in the blossoms, destroyed many of them and in some orchards the blackened leaves on the tips of the branches give the trees a very bad appearance, and this blight has reduced the crop of fruit materially. As the fruit on the Keifer pear trees increase in size it is becoming more apparent that the yield of this fruit will also be large. Strawberries have all gone to market and, while the yield was cut at least one half, prices more than made up for the loss.

Will Arrest Dealers Who Sell Small Fish.

State Game Warden Oregon Milton Dennis has found a provision of the Baltimore City Charter under which he says he will prosecute persons exposing for sale or having in possession any striped bass or rockfish weighing less than half a pound each or any white perch weighing less than a quarter of a pound each. This provision, he declares, places Baltimore city in practically the same position as to rock and perch that it occupied before the passage of the amendment of 1906 exempting the city from the operation of the Act of 1902. The warden proposes to enforce the law against dealers who offer these small fish for sale. On this point he says: "I want publicity given to the above, because I am loath to prosecute until the fishermen are made aware of this provision of the city charter, and I hope the dealers in Baltimore will at once communicate with their shippers the fact that there is such a provision in the charter. I shall wait a reasonable time for this information to go over the state, after which I shall instruct my wardens to enforce the law."

Young Men in a Sailboat Caught in Storm.

A sailboat from Annapolis, containing seven candidates for the Naval Academy, was beached on the shore of Kent Island last Satuaday afternoon during the two storms which passed over that section. The young men had hired the craft for an outing and they were well out in the bay when the first severe blow struck them and the boat was blown a good distance across the bay before the storm subsided. They again set sail for home but the second storm, which was the severest, beached their boat along the shore of the island. The occupants had prepared to swim and it was through discarding some shoes and clothing that some of the wearing apparel was blown into the water. Darkness had set in and the young men's clothes were soaked by the rain. Securing their boat on shore, they walked to Stevensville, where they spent the night. They started for Annapolis again Sunday afternoon and were met by friends in a launch who, becoming alarmed, had started in search of them. The launch took the boat in tow and returned to Annapolis.

Kerosene for Mosquitoes.

Malarial fever is one of our commonest diseases. It is undoubtedly transmitted by mosquitoes and probably by mosquitoes only, although we find it hard, in the light of evidence gathered and published some years ago, to abandon altogether the drinking-water theory. The bearers of the malarial poison belong to one species, the anopheles. This mosquito does not travel far—rarely more than a few hundred yards, it is said. They breed in stagnant water, pools, rain barrels, old tin cans, etc., in warm weather. There are now few in existence. Their increase can be prevented by drainage or oiling with kerosene such water as cannot be drained every two weeks. No mosquitoes, no malaria and more comfort! Think of it! Try it this summer.

Unknown Friends.

There are many people who have used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy with splendid results, but who are unknown because they have hesitated about giving a testimonial of their experience for publication. These people, however, are none the less friends of this remedy. They have done much toward making it a household word by their personal recommendations to friends and neighbors. It is a good medicine to have in the home and is widely known for its cures of diarrhœa and all forms of bowel trouble. For sale by B. E. Cockey & Co.

A Large Increase in Birds and Rabbits.

Reports indicate that the supply of game this year will be larger than for a long time. With the increase in numbers the birds appear to be losing their timidity to a certain extent, for frequently they remain on the ground when a train is approaching, although the noise can be heard some distance away, and do not fly until the locomotive is abreast of them. Partridges have been encouraged and protected more in this section than at some other points on the peninsula, which is believed to be accountable for the increase in the number and the disappearance of timidity. Other birds are also more plentiful. The mockingbird has been making its headquarters on the Eastern Shore for many years, but the supply has not been as large as it is at this time. Rabbits are also numerous. An engineer told the reporter that he often had a chase with rabbits on the track. He sometimes kills them, but they are generally shrewd enough to get out of the way. Many of the fields along the road abound in cottontails and they can be seen darting about as the trains pass.

Gunning has not been carried on as extensively during the past few years as at some other times, which is due partly to the fact that game has been scarce and partly because the hunting grounds have become so limited that the sport is hardly worth the effort. A large number of farmers have for several years prohibited gunning on their premises, which leaves very little territory over which to hunt.

Lee Must be Hanged in Somerset County.

It has been definitely determined by the state authorities that in case of conviction, William Lee, the negro assailant of Mrs. G. R. Barnes and Miss Frances Powell, of Somerset county, must at all hazards be returned to Princess Anne, Somerset's county seat, to be hanged. This was decided in spite of the open assertion of Sheriff George Brown that the county authorities desire no militia or other assistance and the admission by the sheriff that he expected Lee would be burned to death if returned to the seat of his crime. The state plan now is not to send militia with the prisoner, but about 300 stalwart policemen from Baltimore city, commanded most probably by Marshal Farnan, whose talents for handling such a situation are highly thought of both by the governor and his official advisers. Lee was arraigned before Judge Harlan in the Baltimore Criminal Court Thursday. His trial will take place in that city next Thursday.

Man's Life Saved by His Hat Blowing Off.

A valuable mare belonging to C. McSorley Henry, who lives on the "Dr. Earle" farm near Wye Mills, was instantly killed by a bolt of lightning last Saturday afternoon during the heavy storm. The mare was attached to a dearborn loaded with cans containing milk and she was being driven to the Gilt Edge creamery of Thos. F. Shortall, near town, by Herbert Thomas, a negro. When the storm came up, Thomas' hat was blown from his head, a distance of twenty or thirty feet from the dearborn. He stopped the mare and went to recover it and, just as he was in the act of picking it up, the mare was struck and instantly killed. A shaft of the dearborn was also broken. She was insured for $125 but was valued at $200.
