OPPOSED BAY BRIDGE

Large Delegation from Shore visited Annapolis, Wednesday

Former Senator Dudley G. Roe, Legislaturemen Joseph W. A. Evans and Percy Thomas headed a large delegation to Annapolis, Wednesday morning to explain to Gov. Nice their opposition to the proposed Tolchester-Miller's Island bay bridge. The first speaker Abel Wolman, district engineer of the Public Works Administration in Maryland, that the Chesapeake Bay bridge plan filled the requirements of an emergency project.

The Federal Government, he said, would be pleased to see the bill creating a bridge authority become a law. The project would employ 3 000 men for more than two years, he added.

Stuart S. Janney, named in the measure as a member of the authority testified regarding the feasibility of the bridge. The Governor questioned him closely. If it became law, the authority would be empowered by the bill to borrow $12,000,000 for construction. Janney said the site selected would be best, because if the bridge were erected between Sandy Point and Kent Island, the other favorite spot, would cost $25,000,000.

One objector to the bridge was Hervey Allen, author of "Anthony Adverse." He said realizations of the project would change the peaceful peninsula to "a heaven for hot-dog stands, filling stations and joints"

SENATOR ROE

I have always been interested in better transportation between the two sections" Senator Roe said. "Several years ago, in the State Senate, I had a part in pushing legislation for the Matapeake Ferry and the Eastern Shore Boulevard, both of which have been of immense value to the Eastern Shore.

I am not here to oppose a bridge but to oppose the proposed location of this bridge. How anyone familiar with the geography of Maryland can conceive that a bridge built north of Baltimore and north of Tolchester could bridge the two sections of the State together I cannot understand."

He pointed out that the bill stipulates the bridge shall have its terminal at Millers Island, fifteen miles from Baltimore, and at a point north of Tolchester.

The place to build is between Kent Island and Sandy Point," Senator Roe said. "A bridge built there will better serve all of the shore counties, with one exception, and better serve the entire State. If a bridge is to be built in the right location, for no other bridge will ever be built.

Senator Roe said that the only argument he has ever heard advanced against the Sandy Point-Kent Island site is a possible interference with shipping.

This argument, he said, has been abated by the plans for the widening and deepening the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal under which maritime commerce of Baltimore will move through the upper reaches of the bay instead of south and through the capes.

As the bridge project is now arranged, only Kent county stands to benefit from it, Senator Roe said, adding:

"I only hope that if this money is to be spent the bridge will be placed where it will serve the whole people of the State and not merely a single county. It looks like it would be a crime to build a bridge in the wrong place."

DR. THEO. COOK

of Kent Island also opposed the bill. He held that the proposed bill was unfair in that it provided that the Bay Authority could pay up to $1,200,000 for the Claiborne Annapolis ferry, but no provision was made for the purchase of the Love Point or the Tolchester company ferries, which also would be affected by the bridge.

E. T. Miller, of Easton, said he had never known such "unanimity of opposition" to a measure as existed to the bridge bill in Talbot county.

Our people are literally up in arms against the bill," he said, "The only excuse for the proposal is that it will knit the State closer together. This proposed bridge will not make transportation facilities better for fully two-thirds of the State.

Mr. Allen said the bridgewould destroy the present scheme of life enjoyed by the residents of the Eastern Shore by bringing "the motor slums of the United States" and stringing it up and down the peninsula.

Hot-dog stands, filling stations and joints would be benefited, but everyone else would be harmed," he said. "It would depress real estate values.

The census returns, reported by Isaac H. Morris, of Federlsdurg, supervisor of the census for the Shore, show Talbot has 1038 farms instead of 1113 as reported in 1930 a decrease of 65; Dorchester has 1967 farms whereas in 1930 it has 1668 an increase of 366 farms; Worcester has 2165 farms in operation as against 2190 in 1930, a decrease of twenty-five farms; Queen Anne's county has 1238 farms, as against 1464 reported five years ago, a decrease of 226 farms.

Idle farms reported among these counties include 187 in Worcester 105 in Queen Anne's, 13 in Talbot and 86 in Dorchester.

From reports we could gather last week from the watermen the crab crop would be short, but report from oystermen around Love Point, they report more catch of crabs with oyster tongs and dredges than ever known. This is encouraging to our watermen.

With wheat and hogs soaring what will we poor folks have to pay for a loaf of bread or a pork chop? We predict that bread will reach the 20-cent mark before next Saturday. The big boys claim that the rise in wheat is caused by the dust storm in the West destroying the crop.

The Narrows claimed to be the only really tough spot where razors and coffins for two were always in stock, has a close second in Pondtown. Six negroes, a crap game and rough-and-tumble fight landed the palticipants before Police Justice Holden who taxed them five bucks each and costs.

We have had, and are having as this is penned, a notable rainfall. No doubt the land could easily stand a month's drought without injuring any vegetation. Just yet not many gardens that might be affected have been planted. Plum trees are in bloom, willows are already beautiful, maples are in blossom, early spring flowers have been in bloom for some time, latter flowers are showing clusters of buds and about everything is showing signs of renewed life. No indoor plants have yet been intrusted to the open ground. That will come later.

Scientists may be interested in argument about the Neanderthal man, whose ancient bones have led to the theory that he was a specimen entirely different from home sapiens. We have not the slightest objection to the debate over various scientific conjectures but what is important to our citizens is what manner of men are we making today?

There is a great amount of discussion about what is happening to our young people. Some of our best minds believe that the younger generation is going to the devil and others insist that they are no worse than their immediate ancestors. The argument is nation-wide but it doesn't get us anywhere. The pessimist and the optimist simply refuse to end the squabble and both lose sight of the importance of doing something for the young people instead of talking about them.

To tell you the truth, both contentions are right. There are some young people today, caught in the swirl of the new freedoom, who have lost their bearings and are kicking out of the social harness. Others, with better surroundings and better homes, are progressing toward finer and more intelligent individuals. Now, is Grasonville doing anything to give its young people the best possible chance? Are the parents here living the lives that make home the haven for disturbed youth?

These are the questions that every reader of this article can answer alone, without debate and ostentatious argument. To answer means to act, and one grown persons doing some small service for young people is worth ten thousand debates over the course of youth, opines Kenneth Porter.

LEATHERNECK ON THE AIR

He is strong that the Community Hall is a go

Best story of the week goes to Walter Kelly. An echo from Kansas where Prohibition is chronic. The Minister of a colored congregation applied for a permit for wine for church purposes.

"Mr. Mayor, I wants to get a permit for wine for sacrelgious purpose. Why you mean sacramental don't you Phineas. Well, whatever you say, I just want the permit, dat's all. Very well, I'll give you an order on the city druggist and, by the way, what kind of wine do you want. Well, de congregation vote on dat last Sunday evevin, and it seems da were unanimus for win.

Still on the trail of the key to Community Hall. The latest bit of news I hear about the Hall is that the babies are taxed a jitney each to get inside for the FREE music lesson.

The dancing fools, under the management of Mr. Orin Falconer visited Queenstown and vicinity this week and gave a private showing at Rutledge Farm. They have signed on and will be a permanent feature of the three ringed circus on Pig Pen Point.

In a seed catalog—of all places—I find an article reading, We are suffering from lack of honesty and money. We agree with them on the money end. The cash dollar has just about gone into a total eclipse hereabouts.

The money changers are here to beat. Our President, brought confidence to the people through deposit insurance, and practically everyone who had a mattress stuffed with frogskins, rippen it open and hand-d over the Jack to the financiers. Now, all we have to do if we want a couple hundred dollars is to place our heart, liver and lungs in the same box that held or holds the famous frozen assets, and we can go on about our regular business. It's going to be just too bad if someone leaves the refrigerator door open long enough to let something thaw out and the market drops and stays dropped.

The removal of National Bank notes from circulation seems timely. It's a gay life when the large fish in the small pond can collect interest off the Federal Government and have the privilege of printing private money, to loan to John Doe for 6% (if he can get it) or take a chance with it in the Market.

One of the health signs of the times that are slowly but surely coming, I mean the days when old man UPKEEP will demand consideration from some of the insoft gentry, who are able to spend each day, more money than the ordinary citizen gets for a lifetime of toil, is the news that the Morgans and the Mackays are selling some of their priceless old Masters, for a price.

Copied from an old Sampler—Our Lives are albums, written through with good or ill, with false or true. And as the blessed Angles turn the pages of your years; God grant they read the good with smiles and blot the ill with tears.

Healthy Tomato Plants

Success in growing a crop of tomatoes is predicated upon having healthy and strong young tomato plants for transplanting purposes and these result from giving proper attention to seed and seed bed, according to Herman A. Hunter, canning crops specialist for the University of Maryland Extention Service. Especially is it important, he says, to see that the seed is planted at the proper rate in the coldframe or open seed bed Seed planted too thickly, it is pointed out, often results in weak spindly plants which give uneven stands poor growth and low yields If the plants are found to have been planted too thickly they should be thinned at an early date

In addition, it is emphasized by Mr. Hunter, it is important to use only certified seed, unless the grower knows definitely of other reliable sources of seed. Certified seed has been tested for germination and has usually been treated for seed-borne diseases.

In this connection, it it pointed by Mr. Hunter that it is important to spray or dust at weekly or ten days intervals as soon as the young plants show above the gound. This will help control flea beetles and leaf spot disease. Bordeaux mixture spray or copper-lime-arsenate dust should be used and should be applied until time for transplanting, it is said.

Last, but by no means least, it is stated that sufficient plants should be produced to set the entire acreage at the first pulling. It is explained that plants used from the second pulling usually develop stem canker, or collar rot. This disease has been so serious in the state in recent years that growers can well afford a little extra expense for its control, Mr. Hunter emphasizes.
