

natural promenading Low Lane, as in days of yore, gone by!

Thank goodness, my cold has at last left me, and we can have our little concerts as regular as usual.

I received a letter from home on Tuesday, and as usual all want to know when Harv is coming up to see them. Guertlin informs me that he called on you yesterday, and had quite a pleasant time, and I know you contributed largely towards his enjoyment. Do you know if Miss Annie Mullan has returned home yet, I would like to call, and hear an account of the Carnival and things in general at Washington. I shall try to call down next Saturday evening if possible to get out safely. Did you ever see such weather as we are having to day? I went out to church this morning and got a good ducking; this must be the beginning of the Equinoctial storms or a forerunner of the 17th.

I must now wind up, this cranky attempt at a letter and leave you to decipher, if you meet any unintelligible words, make a note of them and I will translate them when I see you. Give my regards to all at home, and hoping to see you soon

I shall remain always

Your true friend
Wm. O. Peirce
