APOLLO'S FOUNT.

The Married Man's Address
TO THE LIBERTINES.

I AM married and happy, with wonder hear this!
Ye rovers and rakes of the age,
Who laugh at the mention of conjugal bliss,
Whom none but loose pleasures engage.
You may laugh—but believe me, "you're all in the wrong,
When you merrily marriage deride;
For to marriage alone lasting pleasure belong.
And in them we can only confide.
Of the joys I possess, you know not one jot,
They contain what you cannot conceive;
Contented and happy, I am pleased with my lot.
Whilst all your false pleasures deceive.
Do you ask from what source my felicity flows?
My answer is short—from a wife,
Whom for virtue, good sense, and good manners I've chose,
Such as these are the blessings of life.
To make home the seat of perpetual delight,
Every moment each strives for to seize;
And we find ourselves happy from morning till night,
By mutual endeavours to please.
