THOUGHTS

Respectfully submitted for the consideration of Rulers.

Why may not peace and justice be secured to nations, with the same facility and certainty, that they are secured to individuals of the same community? Do the laws of different countries, in order to prevent the civil commotions, point out the manner in which the one shall be secured, and the other dispensed: Are differences, which sometimes arise among neighbours, in their dealings with each other amicably settled by arbitrators; and even submitted to them for decision, when the parties have almost ruined themselves by a tedious and expensive course of law? Yes—Why then may not business be settled in the same manner upon a larger scale, between the contending nations of the earth, the greater part of whom are already ruined?

Shall man, short lived man, take the life of his brother, and know not for what? Shall the bosom of the earth be manured, and the Waters of the great deep be stained with human blood?—Shall the list of broken-hearted widows, and helpless orphans, be daily encreased by the premature deaths of husbands and fathers? Shall a few individuals keep the world in commotion, and entail misery on millions? Shall thousands, and tens of thousands of human victims, be immolated on the altar of man's ambition? Shall the bubble honor be purchased at so dear a rate?—Shall the page of history be written with blood alone, by the present generation? Forbid it Heaven! May thy wrath be averted, and the sword of vindictive justice, which is now suspended over the guilty nations of the earth bathed in blood, be returned to his scabbord, no more to be drawn!

It is believed that a plan may be adopted, which would cause the horrid tumult of war to cease, and banish from the world its concomitant evils. Let every nation, which may desire the blessings of peace, send forward one or more representatives, who should be cloathed with authority, and as a body be invested with the power of regulating the laws of nations. Let each nation be compelled to abide by the decisions of this convention, and pledge themselves to unite in enforcing obedience, if any individual power should refuse to submit to terms of amity, which they might prescribe. Such arbitrators would doubtless dispense justice: should not a full represensation be immediately obtained, the number would increase, and a greater consequent ability would there be to prevent national and civil wars. Such a body would form an invincible, and irresistible phalanx, and unite the nations of the earth in friendship and affection.—There would be a commercial intercourse between all the members of Adam's great family. The sword, then useless, would be turned into the plow share, the rusty spear be sharpened, and bent for a pruning hook. Then might the children of men unite with the choirs above, saying glory to God in the highest; on earth, peace and good will to men.

If any are disposed to enquire how this can be brought about, the reply would be, let those who have the reins of government in their hands, send forward to Washington their several delegates, who might rally around this standard of peace.

As something should be established upon a permanent basis, let a Temple of Peace be erected in America, or some part of Europe, as might be agreed on. This should differ from the temple of Janues at Rome, by having its gates always open, whereas that was shut in time of peace, for the last time, when the Prince of peace came into the world. Thither the ambassadors of peace might assemble, deliberate, and devise plans for ameliorating the state of the world; and would have the prayers of all the religious, in every country, engaged for their success.

The simplicity of the above plan, for the magnitude of the object, may induce some to think that this desirable end could not thus be secured. But if any thing is done it must be upon a simple, not a complex plan. May God put it in the hearts of the several rulers of nations to adopt this, or substitute some other mode to secure the peace and happiness of the world!

PHILANTHROPOS.

 The editors of papers in America and Europe, are requested to insert the above in their papers.
