MARIA.

HOLY spirit! Child of glory!
Give thy sainted form to view;
Pierce the mist, that sails before thee
With thine eye of melting blue.

Ha! The veil of mist is broken,
Lo! She comes on wings of air;
And displays the gleamy token,
Shining in her golden hair.

So she look'd, when glowing beauty
Ripen'd on her blooming cheek;
So, when sorrow claimed her duty,
Would her eye of azure speak.

So she look'd, when Heaven's portal
Opened to her ravished sight:
So she look'd, when strains immortal
Hymned her to the realms of light.

Hark! The trembling harp of Heaven
Breathes in numbers soft and wild—
Yes, by thee the strain is given,
Holy Marvin's sainted child!

Such the strains of melancholy,
When the day began to fade—
Such the strains, so soft and holy,
Once in Marvin's halls she play'd.

Once through Marvin's shady bowers,
Music light the moments led,
Thornless, then, the sweetest flowers
Pillowed Marvin's aged head.

But no more the melting numbers
Float the breezy winds along;
Waked no more from airy slumbers,
Angels swell the choral song.

Dim the hope that fancy borrows;
Dim the joys that fortune gave;
Marvin's daughter sooth'd his sorrows,
Now she sleeps in yonder grave!

Yes, his sweet and only blossom,
Richly ripening into bloom,
Yes, the pride of Marvin's bosom
Slumbers in the silent tomb!

Why men are poor, and ladies thinner;
But thousands now for dinner dress,
Till nothing's left to dress for dinner.

A gentleman sat down to write a deed, and began with "Know one Woman by these presents"—You are wrong (says a bystander) it ought to be "Know all men." "Very well" answered the other, "if one Woman knows it, all Men will of course."
