The Alexandria Register mentions being favored by a friend with a sample of Strawberries now growing in Fairfax county, Virginia, which were perfectly ripe and of good flavor—It is but three or four weeks since the Editor of this paper saw, at Col. Brearley's, at Spring Grove, a fine bunch of Raspberries, some of which were fully ripe, others ripening, and others again quite green —— These rarities are worth noticing, as they tend to prove the change which our climate has undergone and is undergoing.—[T.T.Am.

VALUABLE PROPERTY
FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale, the Dwelling House, Store House, Granery and Wharf, situate on Choptank River, opposite Denton, Caroline county, (directly at the Ferry)—This establishment is well situated for a merchant to transact business on a large scale with considerable advantage. In the building of this property, great care was observed in calculating it for convenience—and it is so conveniently built, that any one may go from the dwelling to the store and grancry without going out of doors; and from the granery, grain can be easily shipped through spouts into vessels alongside the wharf, which saves a great deal of time and labour.

There is now building (and well advanced) a strong and substantial bridge across the said river, within ten feet of the door, which bridge will supercede the ferry, and unite the eastern and western shores of the county at this place. It may be observed, that between Dover Bridge and Greensborough Bridge, a distance between 20 and 30 miles, (this is the only passage,) and being within a quarter of a mile of the county town, makes it very public.

Any person or persons desirous to purchase the said property, are invited to view the premises.—Should not the above property be sold at private sale before the 17th December next, it will on that day be offered at public sale on the premises, where further particulars will be made known, and attendance given by

JOHN MEEDS, or
WILLIAM HARPER.

PROPOSALS
BY EDWAREARLE,
FOR PUBLISHING BYBSCRIPTION,
THE WRKS
CORNELIUSACITUS,
With an Essay on his Land Genius, Notes, Supplems, &c.
BY ARTHUR MUPHEY, ESQ.
The first American frome last London edition—with the authorast corrections.

AS a brief recommeation of the above works to those to om they may not be already known, thellowing notice of them is copied from theondon Review of the time when they werirst published.

"Though," says this Iview, "it be with the translation of Tacituhat we have now to do, not with the charair of that original and great historian himse it would be difficult, perhaps unnaturel d indecorous, to pass by the present oppomity of recognising the merit of that sulme genius, and joining in the general voi of applause and admiration. Cornelius Titus, by a rare felicity of circumstances. nited in himself all those relations, qualtieond accomplishments, that are requisite tform a great historian: He was of senatial rank, and in that order highly distinguned. He enjoyed the favor of the princesand sovereigns of the civilized world, and Hd civil offices of the highest dignity and mportance. He possessed a native probityand elevation of mind; and these noble quities were heightened and confirmed by a habitual conversancy with the history of ie Roman republic, and an education in th principles of the sublimest philosophy. Ie profoundness of his reflections, the precion of his diction, his elegant and energe ic levity, and somathing remarkable pictureque and dramatic in his manner, conspire wh the dignity and importance of his subjeo, to clothe his works with a never failingbloom, and render his fame immortal. Ie records the actions, the counsels, the secet motives of the great actors in the greatei political drama that was ever exhibited otthe world; and the History of Tacitus, asis well observed by his accomplished translaor and cri ic, is "Philosophy teaching by ample."

The contents of these volmes seem naturally to admit of the followig division:—

1. A dedication to the rigt honorable Edmund Burke; an essay onhe life & genius of Tacitus; the annals of Tritus, with supplements and an appendix; genealogical table, with an index, of the Cisars; notes on the annals and appendix, ad maps of the ancient world as known to te Romans, and of Asia. 2. The history offacitus, with an appendix, and notes to the hitory and appendix; and maps of the city d Jernsalem and of Italy. 3 The celebratel and valuable Treatise on the manners o the Germans, with notes and a map of ancent Germany; and the life of Agricola witinotes, & a geographical table of the places,rivers, &c. mentioned in these volumes. Tothese authentic works of Tacitus is added, "the dialogue concerning Oratory, of which, as Mr Murphy in a note has justly remarked, "The commentators are much divided in their opinions about the real author. This work, they all agree, is a masterpiece in the kind; written with taste and judgment entertaining, profound and elegant But whether it is to be ascribed to Tacitus, Quinctilian, or any other person, whom they cannot name, is a question upon which they have exhausted a store of learning" Mr. Murphy, after giving an account of the principal arguments pro and con, says in conclusion, although he seems to lean to the opinion that it is the production of Tacitus: "The dispute is of no importance; for, as Lipsius says, whether we give the dialogue to Quinctilian or to Tacitus, no inconvenience can arise. Whoever was the author, it is a performance of uncommon beauty."

"Mr Murphy has given the sense of his author in a pleasing and proper style, and even catched not a little of his manner: in order to do which, in so long a work, it was necessary to be master of the whole compass of the English language. His notes and supplements show that he is intimately conversant with Roman antiquity, and with literature in general. He views the objects that pass before him with the eye of a critic, a moralist, and a politician; and in particular, he makes interesting comparisons between the situations and characters of different ancient and modern tribes and nations."

CONDITIONS.

1. The Works of Tacitus shall be put to press as soon as a sufficient number of subscriptions shall be obtained to justify it.

2. They shall be printed with a new pica type, on a fine paper made for the purpose, with proper attention to uniformity of colour and quality throughout.

3. The volumes shall be delivered in the order in which they are published, and shall succeed each other as speedily as a due attention to the execution will permit—each volume to be paid for on delivery, at $2 50 per vol. in boards.

☞ The London edition of Tacitus is in 8 vols. 8vo; the American edition will be in 6 vols. 8vo. and will sell at half the price of the former
