Mr. Matteson Describes New England Hurricane.

At the last weekly meeting at Scientists' Cliffs the night of September 24th, Mr. Harold, Matteson gave an account of the hurricane which he experienced in Rhode Island. At the height of the storm Mr. Matteson, attempting to drive his automobile south from Providence, experienced many narrow escapes from falling telephone and light poles, trees and flying pieces of roofs. Mr. Matterson stated that the destruction of street and lawn trees was stupendous, especially the large elms which are so characteristic of New England.

On his drive back through Connecticut the damage to trees and poles seemed to be quite as bad as in Rhode Island.

The tidal wave was very destructive to buildings along the shore and as far up as Providence, Mr. Matteson inspected the factory of Jack Rpen, who has made several visits to Scientists' Cliffs, and found it badly wrecked. The huge wave of water had smashed in the sides in many places, washed away most of the goods and floating timbers pounded up the machinery

Miss Effie Ford, a cousin of Mrs. Gravatt's, of Port Republic, and a visitor here the past summer, has been unreported since the storm She and her husband were in a house at Battle R. I., at the time of the storm Not only was the house washed away, but all the land as well. Entire communities where the houses were located only a few yards above water level was completely demolished.

In addition to Mr Matteson's account of the storm, Dr. Annie May Karver gave a talk on some of the Western roads, illustrated by colored slides

After the meeting the colony viewed the heavens through the new six-inch leaf telescope, under the guidance of Dr. Keiss. The large telescope is mounted on a re inforced concrete base, and the building is on wheels on a runway and is pushed aside while the telescope is being used.
