JOB WORK.

Handbills, large and small, flyers, dodgers, letterheads, billheads, envelopes, cards, tags, programmes, and other kinds of job work will be done neatly and reasonably.

Correspondence upon matters of local interest desired. Anonymous communications will not be inserted.

It is desirable that communications be in by Saturday night if possible, and in any case not later than Monday night or Tuesday morning.

The Schools of Kent county closed at the end of last week for a two-months holiday.

Teachers' Examination held in Chestertown to-morrow; also examination for scholarship. See notices.

The steamer Matilda brought a large colored excursion from Baltimore to Chestertown, on last Sunday. The crowd was quiet and orderly.

The Jersey Blue made her appearance at Thompson's wharf last week. She is fitted up for passenger traffic, but is intended principally for freight.

The Chester River Steamboat Company give notice in this issue, that they are now prepared to receive grain on consignment or to pay the highest cash price therefor.

Thursday of next week, the encampment of Amicable Lodge I. O. O. F. give a moonlight excursion, by the B. S. Ford, down the river to Queenstown. The excursion will undoubtedly be a most enjoyable one. See advertisement.

The Enterprise Transportation Company give notice in this issue that they are prepared to handle every class of freight between various landings on Chester river and tributaries and Baltimore. Read their advertisement for particulars.

The last quarterly association for the past school year, of the Kent county teachers met at the school room, in Chestertown, on last Saturday. The old officers were re-elected for the new year, and several questions were discussed by the association.

Tuesday of next week the new registration of voters will begin, and will continue through the week. Let every one entitled to a vote give attention to the important duty of registering. The legal notice of the registrars will be found elsewhere.

Washington College commencement exercises will be held next week. On Tuesday evening an address will be delivered before the Mt. Vernon Literary Society, and on Wednesday morning addresses will be delivered by the graduating class, and the baccalaureate degree conferred. See advertisement elsewhere.

The New Steamer, Corsica, of the Chester River Company's line, made her first appearance at the wharf in Chestertown yesterday. She was inspected by a large number of visitors, and much admired. Though built principally as a freight boat, she is yet as neat as a new pin. Her passenger accomodations are pleasant, and her state-rooms are roomy and handsomely furnished. All the machinery and builders' work appears to be substantial and secure.

Honorary Mention.—The following are the names of the pupils of the Chestertown public school, who achieved an average of 80 per cent. and over, at the recent examination for promotion:

Closing Exercises at the Town Public School.—The large recitation hall at the public school building, Chestertown, was well filled on Friday last, on the occasion of closing exercises. The Kent Cornet Band was quartered in one of the side recitation rooms, from whence came, between times, bursts of good music. When the hour for opening arrived, the minor grades were marched in from one of the back recitation rooms. They kept time to music in their marching, and smiled out their appreciation of the occasion. When they were all seated in seats that had been reserved for them, exercises of the morning were opened with prayer by Rev. S. C. Roberts, followed by "Merry Sunshine," sung in chorus by the school. Miss Maggie Wroth, a member of the advance grade class, read a salutatory full of warm greeting to all present. A duet song by Lottie Russell and Emma Lambert followed, and then a selection was read very prettily and naurally by Elsie Stephens. The band played, after which Miss Mary Bowers, another member of the advanced grade class, read an essay, entitled "What of the day?" The essayist took a wide range, discussing important recent happenings in the world at large. After the essay the minor grades, numbering more than a hundred, were marched to the stage, and sang in chorus a lively song that was made the more lively by being acted as well as sung. The audience were much pleased and amused by the spirit with which the little fellows, (including the girls in the term) performed their part. The band played, after which Emma Rolph read very spiritedly a selection upon a young lady's soliloquy in church. A duet by Laura Thomas and Mary Beck, was very prettily sung. "Vacation Days" was sung in chorus by the school, with great animation. The valedictory essay was read by Miss Maggie Fowler, who took the examination honors of the advance class. The essay was characterized by warm feeling. J. T. Rowley, Esq., was introduced as the orator of the day. Mr. Rowley took for his subject, "Fixed Principles of Belief." He discussed the unfixedness of belief in this age of [illegible] skepticism, and paid a high tribute [illegible] intuitively [illegible] man [illegible] orts [illegible] the [illegible] d by [illegible] yet a [illegible] h with [illegible] Casey, [illegible] nty-five [illegible] Ireland [illegible] left in [illegible] r. Casey [illegible] yment as [illegible] r. L. K. [illegible] me back, [illegible] e to come [illegible] teaching [illegible] against [illegible] did not know that his sister seriously purposed sailing for America until Monday of last week when he received a letter, saying that in five days from the date on which her letter was written, she would embark for New York, by the steamer Alaska. He received the letter on Monday, the 26th of June, and he ascertained that the Alaska had arrived in New York the day before, Sunday. On Tuesday morning of last week he took the train for Chestertown to meet his sister, and bring her home with him. He arrived in New York on the evening of the same day, and immediately sought the pier of the Alaska. He found that his sister had come by the steamer, but he could get no information as to her whereabouts. The only clue he could get was that she had left the steamer in company with some other young girls and a young man. He telegraphed to Chestertown that he was unable to find his sister, and on Wednesday morning Rev. J. D. Carey started for New York to join him in the search. Miss Casey is only eighteen years of age, and arriving in New York with no one to meet her, knowing no one, and ignorant of the wickedness that prowls at large in a great city, the brother was of course greatly distressed at not being able to find her whereabouts. All day Wednesday he kept up an unavailing search, and on Wednesday evening was joined by Rev. Father Carey. The police were notified of the disappearance, and a private detective was summoned to join in the search. On Thursday a clue was obtained as to the identity of the young man who left the Alaska in company with Miss Casey and the other girls on the previous Sunday. His boarding-house was visited and subsequently his place of employment, where he was found. Mr. Casey recognized the young man as one whom he had known in Ireland. The young man's name was Keating. The detective placed Keating under arrest, and took him before a police court. Keating testified that he had seen Miss Casey on the day of her arrival, and that he had taken a walk to look at the city with her and some other girls, but that she returned with her companions to the Alaska, and that he knew nothing of her subsequent whereabouts. Other witnesses corroborated his statement that Miss Casey had returned to the Alaska, and Keating was released. All day Thursday a search was kept up, visits being made to all sorts of places into which an unsuspecting young girl might have been betrayed. The search was growing wellnigh hopeless, when a telegram reached Mr. Casey through police headquarters from his sister, telling him of her whereabouts. She had seen in the daily papers a notice of her supposed abduction, of her brother's search and of Keating's arrest. She had met with no manner of harm, had remained on the Alaska Sunday night, and had been stopping during the whole time, after leaving the steamer on Monday morning, with Mrs. McGrath of Jersey City. A daughter of Mrs. McGrath had returned by the Alaska from a trip to Ireland, and Miss Casey had accepted an invitation to stop with her until her brother should have come for her. The confusion as to her whereabouts resulted from a want of forethought on her part in leaving her address. Instead of leaving it with some proper authority of the steamer, she had left it with one of the sailors, with instructions to give it to her brother when he should call. The sailor was either ignorant of Mr. Casey's having inquired at the steamer for his sister or else was too indifferent to deliver what had been entrusted to him. Miss Casey was resting quietly in Jersey City under the belief that as soon as her brother inquired at the steamer he would be given her proper address.

All is well that ends well, and on Saturday the affair ended well by all parties arriving safely in Chestertown. Miss Casey is an unsophisticated looking young girl, and if she ever crosses the ocean again, she will probably have more useful knowledge than she was provided with on this recent occasion.

The Owl Club Afloat.—A Memorable Fourth of July Celebration.—What is so rare as a Fourth of July when the sun doesn't shine so hot, that everybody says it is the hottest fourth of July he ever knew. Who can recall a fourth of July when the citizen who was preparing to celebrate, did not mop his brow and say, "Whew, where is the thermometer going to anyhow?" But last Tuesday was not that sort of a glorious 4th. The fact would seem to be that old probabilities has got his calander mixed this year, and put in St. Patricks where the 4th by all that is right and proper, ought to have come in. The "owl club" of Chestertown were deluded into the belief that the recent 4th was going to be, as usual, a little hotter than any other 4th had ever been. As early as nine Tuesday morning (unusually early for the owls) the club began to assemble, trigged for the most part in jaunty sailor costume, and being provided with hats uncommonly wide as to the brim, the aforesaid hats being intended as protection against the scorching rays of a 4th of July sun. Two big canoes, capable of carrying twenty each, and a smaller canoe that would not hold quite so many were drawn up at the wharf of the Chestar River steamboat company, and were boarded about ten o'clock by about twenty-five "owls," and by a few others who had no claim to the distinguished honor of being "owls." The ham sandwitches, the ice, and the—the—lemonade, were also stowed on board. The oysters were to be found at the place of rendevous. The breeze was fine, and all the ships sped away gallantly. It is an established fact, that the owls rarely sing, and rarely crack a joke, but on this auspicious occasion, the voices of several owls broke forth into touching melody. The tune was, "Bridget Donohoe." And so the jokes that were cracked, were so outrageously funny, that one young owl was compelled to tie his head up in a handkerchief to keep from laughing all his hair off, and the rest, whenever a joke was cracked were compelled to hold on tightly to keep from laughing themselves overboard. One owl, indeed, either from laughing at a joke, or from some other reason, split the end of his finger, and was compelled to keep it on ice during the whole of the voyage. Some may be inclined to think the above statement as to the hilarity of the "owls" a little overdrawn,—and may be it is,—may be it is—but there was much lemonade aboard.

About half way there, the Sun obscured himself behind a cloud, and the glorious 4th began to drizzle. It takes an immense amount of rain to soak the good nature out of an "owl," hence the jokes and the songs were kept up until all three, the canoes ran their nozzles on the beach at North Point. A beautiful grove, that was to have been the landing point, was given up in favor of a vacant house that stood a short distance from the grove. Fires were soon kindled, and two big pots were brought ashore. A canoe load of oysters were shortly after landed on the beach. It was not the kind of a glorious 4th, for bathing and fishing, but it was a very fine day for eating oysters, drinking—ah—lemonade, and making speeches. To see an "owl" meandering down the street in Chestertown, nobody would suppose him to be cram-jam full of eloquent oratory, but some of the speeches made on the recent glorious 4th brought down the house in a manner that was utterly astonishing. If the outside world could only have beheld a certain young owl that roosts on Front street, as he stood on a chicken coop with his hat on the back of his head, a beautiful smile illuminating his features and both hands raised high in air, and could have listened to the flood of eloquence that poured from his lips, then the outside world could form some idea of what an owl has shut up in him.

The president of the owls was called on for a speech, but he preferred giving a full swing to the younger owls. Judge B. of the commissary department was cheered as the right sort of an owl to manage a feast.

At about three P. M. it was voted time to start home. The drizzle of the morning had developed into a settled rain, and as there seemed no promise of holding up, the "owls" concluded that the best thing that could be done was to weather the storm.

The president of the "owls" and a few others had had so little confidence in the glorious 4th that they had brought along gum overcoats. As it proved, there was much wisdom in their distrust. On the start for home, the wind and tide were both dead against the canoes. The small canoe got a good start and reached home without much difficulty. The "Black Maria," with eleven "owls" aboard, headed for Wilkins' wharf, intending to signal the B. S. Ford at that point, and board her for Chestertown. The "Columbus Leary" followed the Maria, some distance in the rear. The glorious 4th seemed to lose all regard for its past reputation. With an unceasing flood the rain poured, and soaked the "owls" to the hide. The Maria came almost to a standstill and the oars had to be brought into play. The "Eureka" had got almost out of sight ahead the "Maria" and the "Leary" was laboring with wind and tide well behind. When the "Maria" reached Wilkins' wharf, a more woe-be-gone, bedrenched and bedraggled set of owls, the rains never beat upon. Soon after the landing of the Maria, the wind carried away the mast of the "Leary," and the Maria was sent to her rescue. The eleven owls from the Maria, promenaded the wharf, awaiting the Ford to heave in sight. Finally the steamer came puffing along, and the whole batch of owls ranged themselves along the front of the wharf, and began waving coats, handkerchiefs and hats to attract the steamer. The boat ran within a hundred yards of the wharf, but paid not the slightest attention to the signals of the bedraggled owls. The owls had heretofore cherished a high esteem for the captain of the Ford. In fact he was looked upon as being a sort of honorary owl himself. But on this occasion, notwithstanding the owls are usually very mild spoken, there were some epithets hurled at Captain McC. that had very much the smell of brimstone about them. The owls were very much astonished later, to learn that the captain never saw them.

What may have become of the disconsolate owls there is no telling, had not Mr. B. F. Wilkins learned of their unfortunate condition, and have come down and invited them in a body to his house. The owls were ushered to a blazing fire in the library, and Mr. S. M. Wilkins knowing what was the most cheerful thing on earth for a wet owl, asked them to step into an adjoining room and "take something." The owls almost unexceptionally "took something" and pronounced it very fine. This together with the warming influences of the fire, soon brought the owls back to a condition of hilarity. Later Mr. Wilkins hitched a pair of mules to a wagon and sent the part of the owl club that had drifted his way, home. The owls have cause to be everlastingly grateful to Mr. Wilkins, and hope to have an opportunity some day of squaring accounts with him.

There remains little further to be told of the owl club and its celebration of the glorious 4th. All arrived home safely and all were able to report sound, yesterday morning. It was a celebration not soon to be forgotten.

Ed. Transcript:—Mr. G. W. Jacoby met with a severe accident to-day while engaged in regulating the movements of a Champion Self-Binder, on the premises of Hon. G. W. Spencer. His right thumb was accidently caught in some part of the machinery and nearly drawn and severed from the hand. Drs. Latimer and Delaney skillfully dressed the wound, and the patient is at present doing as well as could be expected. OBSERVER.

"NOTES BY THE WAY."

OPINIONS ABOUT THE PEACH CROP AND OTHER MATTERS.

There was no justness in the hanging of Guiteau, but there was a necessity for it. While he was morally insane and to a certain degree irresponsible, the welfare of society and the preservation of life demanded his execution.

The crop of peaches on the peninsula this year will not exceed the crop of 1880, and the prospect for remunerative prices was never better. The failure of the crop in the North and West, and the numerous canneries and evaporators at home will tend to give fair markets. There is very little canned and dried fruit in the country, and taking every thing into consideration, the grower of good fruit, will find at the end of the season, his peaches have been his most profitable crop.

Most farmers are done harvesting. The straw is generally heavy and well grained.

The majority of Self-Binders have given satisfaction in this section. If they are properly put together, any one that has patience and common sense can run them. A twelve year old boy near here, cut over one hundred acres last week with one make of Self-Binder. Some of the machines are sent from the shops incomplete and they give trouble.

John Gibson (residing near here) had forty sheep killed by lightning last Saturday afternoon.

It is said that one man can pare 25 baskets peaches an hour by means of the steam-parer.

T. J. Shallcross has issued his first variety list of peach trees. He budded only choice varieties and guarantees them to be genuine.

The early varieties of peaches are rotting and dropping off very badly.

Still Pond academy held its annual entertainment last Friday evening. After the declaiming and other exercises (which were well rendered) were over, the scholars and guests were served with refreshments. The evening was very profitably and pleasantly spent.

A "Law and order society" would be a good thing in this county. People that will not keep holy the Sabbath day ought to be made keep it as a day of rest. There is enough going on (that should be stopped) to keep a society busy. Cutting wheat, picking peaches, fishing, running excursions, &c., on Sunday; then horse racing, gambling, and lots of other things that are indirect violation of law and demoralizing to society. The sheriff of the county might make dollars where he doesn't make cents.

Peninsula News.

The down peninsula huckleberry crop is said to be immense.

The Dover Delawarean says there were 1230 carloads of strawberries shipped over the Delaware road this season.

A Somerset man claims to have cleared this season $350 from three-fourths of an acre planted in Sharpless strawberries.

A call has been issued for a peach growers meeting to convene at the court house in Dover, Del., at one o'clock to-day.

Accomac and Northampton counties, of the lower part of this peninsula, are introducing German labor with satisfactory results.

ATTENTION FARMERS!

The certificate given below explains itself:

MR. E. T. COMEGYS,

of Locust Grove, Kent Co., Md.,

DEAR SIR—It gives me great pleasure to be able to fully recommend the McCormick Self-Binder, one of which I had the pleasure of using last season. We cut with it in all conditions of grain. The machine has done all that was claimed for it, and come up to more than our expectations. We consider it one of the best labor-saving machines that we have on our farms, and the most economical, when we count the board and wages of binders and loss of grain in binding, handling, stacking and threshing after hand-bound grain. No farmer who has run a Binder one season, will think of running anything else. Would not part with ours for double its cost if we could not get another. For lightness of draft, thoroughness of cutting and binding, simplicity of construction and durability, we think the McCormick has no superior.

Mr. Wm. W. Cosden, of Laukford, Kent Co. Md., Oct. 1, 1881, writes:

The Self-Binder I bought of your agent this season, Mr. E. T. Comegys, of Locust Grove, Md., has given perfect satisfaction in every respect. I cut 110 acres of wheat this season, and broke only one link of reel chain. I also cut thirty acres for my uncle, and helped a neighbor to cut who had used a different Binder. The McCormick Binder was acknowledged to be a horse lighter in draft.

Buy the McCormick Self-Binder, a machine of 50 years standing. If upon two days trial the machine will not work satisfactorily, it will be taken back and all costs refunded to the farmer.
