What is the Reason?

Chester A. Arthur, President, says that he didn't do it. No! No! It was not his fault. What has he done, that the country should turn spitefully around and go Democratic? Has he not lived up to the highest ideal of the president of a great country? Have not the manner in which he bowed, the manner in which he parted his hair, the color of his clothes and the cut of his side whiskers been published all over the American continent? Surely, the country cannot expect that its President be a leader in fashionable society and have brains too. Is it not enough that he should be a standard authority upon how to hold your knife and fork, upon how to enter a parlor, and how to bow, and how to smile and upon how to talk fashionable twaddle?

No, no! Chester A. Arthur didn't do it. Both parties are tickled almost to death with Chester A. Arthur.

Did Secor Robeson do it? Was it the figure he cut as Republican leader in the last House, coupled with the fact that he stole, pocketed and divided among his friends millions of dollars, while Secretary of the Navy, under Grant?

Did Dick Harrington have anything to do with the victory?

Did the blunderbuss speakership of Kiefer have any force in shoving the late avalanche? Is Kiefer responsible for the upheaval in Ohio?

Did Donald Cameron, backed by the ancient Simon, lend a helping hand to the Democrats in Pennsylvania?

Has the bad record of the Republican party, for the last ten years, had anything to do with the sweeping turn to the Democrats? Has reckless refusal to lessen taxation, reckless squandering of the public funds, done anything toward prejudicing the masses against the Republican party? Has the frequent unearthing of thieves, placed in high offices by the Republican party, finally brought the country to understand that it is time the party be compelled to step down? Would the people like the departments to be turned over to a party that is not interested in covering things up, so that it may be ascertained how much rascality lies hidden away from public view?

If all these be reasons, they are reasons that will last till the November election of 1884.

EX-CANDIDATE MULLIKIN ascribes his defeat to the fact that the Republican central committee in Baltimore sent him no bar'l.

NEXT year is a home year in politics. Blessed are they who don't want anything, for verily they are most likely to be glad when the tidings come.

IN the 4th judicial circuit, the latest count gives Stake, the Republican candidate, a majority of one over Syester, the Democratic candidate. Judge Alvey, Democratic candidate for Chief Judge, is elected, beyond question.

POSSIBLY, in the mixed and murky state of Democratic politics, it might have a purifying effect to come to the Eastern Shore for a Governor next time. We are growing several good Governors on the Eastern Shore.

"SENATOR GORMAN AND BOSS WHYTE." Well, well, how things are changed. SENATOR GORMAN and BOSS WHYTE. "But only yesterday, and the word of Cæsar might have stood against the world, and now lies he there and none so poor to do him reverence."

IN spite of the war of politics, the crash of Republicanism, and the wreck of bosses, little Billy Mahone will continue to be a small dog with a very loud bark in the next United States Senate. The probability seems to be, that as votes Billy, so votes the United States Senate.

LET us not be too enthusiastic over the late cyclone. There is a bigger and a more important fight ahead. If the recent victory shall help us to win in '84, it is a glorious victory. If it should possibly contribute to our losing in '84,—what then? A little authority is sometimes a very dangerous thing.

AND now for '84,—but here in Maryland we will experience some difficulty in centreing our gaze upon '84 until after '83. Next year we have to nominate and elect a new Governor, and to form a new legislature. With a good man in the field for Governor, undoubtedly Maryland is largely Democratic. Let us have a strong, untarnished and unspotted nominee for Governor, and let us have, in every county, the best men to be found as Democratic nominees to the legislature.

The boys of Northfield College, on the day this time the whaleboat was missing, were having a great battle around the flag staff of the first cutter on social order is changing a physician's office. Neither law nor Dr. Long sign for that of an undertaker, when [illegible] and successes ordered the big kettle full of warm tar was still lowered to a [illegible] down emptied upon them from the roof within hail. The sea, however, behind the house. More than equally [illegible] to see the stern, and them had to throw away their caps. Dr. Long, apparently seeing clothes and get their hair cut very [illegible] the states of the whaleboat, waved short. [illegible] hand, as Melville interpreted it, to indicate to him that he did not desire to hail. He understood the signal to mean that he should run before the wind and look out for his own boat, regardless of the previous orders "to keep at all times within sight of the first cutter." In a few minutes the whaleboat was out of sight of the other two boats. This was the last Melville ever saw of the second cutter or her crew, and the last he saw of the crew in the first cutter until he found them dead in the Lena delta. Just as they were disappearing he said to Mr. Danenhower: "If this keeps up it will be necessary to heave the boat to." Danenhower replied: "Yes, Melville, it should have been done before." After some discussion and conference they set about making a drag of tent poles, and when all was ready the drag was thrown over and the boat hove to. During the night the boat continually took in water, and the men huddled under the weather cloths and protected themselves as best they could from the gale while bailing out the water. The next morning the drag was taken in and the course laid for the Lena delta, which they estimated was fifty miles distant.

Mellville's reference to Danenhower's remark (to which Danenhower himself has not referred) created a ripple of excitement in the room.

The Hon. Simon Cameron on the Democratic Opportunity.

From the Philadelphia Telegraph.

Ex-Senator Simon Cameron, in reply to the inquiry, "What do you think of the result of Tuesday?" replied: "I think we were handsomely whipped." "How do you account for this great revolution which has taken place?" "Well, the chief cause of it is in the fact that an element existed in the party that was seeking its own personal advancement instead of the good of the party. In other words, they have tried to use the party to build themselves up. The opportunity for the Democrats to win was the best they have had in twenty years, and they have taken advantage of it and done so creditably. They have fought an aggressive campaign; they have had no apologies and explanations to make; and they are on the top." "Do you think there is any prospect of the discordant elements in the party uniting?" "No," replied Mr. Cameron, his eye sparkling with animation. "Then that means defeat for the party in 1884?" suggested the interviewer. "No, not necessarily, presuming to assume what may occur such a long time ahead." "But, General, how can the party be successful in 1884 if the two factions are not brought together?" "Well, I don't care to enter into a discussion of the political situation at this time," replied the ex-chieftain.

Mr. Blaine Hard to Interview.

From the New York Star.

Imperiously but kindly gazing upon one of the diminutive clerks of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, Ex-Secretary James G. Blaine was yesterday accosted by a reporter.

'How are you satisfied with the election, Mr. Blaine?'

The statesman from Maine cast a glance at the interrogator sufficiently withering to knock an ordinary man out and, blinking both eyes loftily answered:

'Thoroughly satisfied. Are you?'

'Perfectly, Mr. Blaine. I would like to ask you a question or two as to what effect it will have on the Rep—'

'Don't know anything about it, sir.'

'Will any attempt be made to reorgan—'

'Sir!'

'It is stated that an attempt will be made to reor—'

'Very likely,' without waiting to hear the finish of the question.

'How do you account for the large—'

'Can't account for anything, sir,' came the curt reply, as, wrapping his tightly-fitting overcoat about him and buttoning his Bernhardt satin-colored gloves, Mr. Blaine, of Maine, turned on his heel and sailed out into the street with rapid stride.

THE OUTLOOK FOR 1884.

MR. ARTHUR'S MOST INTIMATE FRIEND VIRTUALLY GIVES UP THE FIGHT.

The New York Times for Saturday last has the following: Mr. George Bliss has a representative character. Whatever he may claim or disclaim, he is known to be in the confidence of the President, as perhaps no other man is. He may not speak for Mr. Arthur, but there is such a sympathy and mutual understanding between them that we may be sure that what he says represents the opinions of the distinguished city politician who now occupies the seat to which Garfield was elected. This fact alone gives special interest to his utterances. Mr. Bliss was asked yesterday to give his views upon the present political situation; to state how he accounted for the Republican overthrow of Tuesday, and in regard to the future of the party. In reply to the latter question he said:

"I have little faith that the control which was given to the democracy by the result of last week's elections can be wrested from them prior to the next presidential election. My feeling about that is this: The men who feel to-day that they have been stricken down by the acts of their fellow-republicans are, I am afraid, so human that when next year or the year after some one of those fellow-republicans comes up for support they will be apt to apply to him the same treatment which has been applied to Folger. For instance, suppose some man comes up as a candidate who is recognized as a Blaine man. Can there be any question that a sufficient number of republicans in the State of New York would be either hostile to him or lukewarm to prevent the State from being carried by the Republicans? Would not the same thing prevail in the case of a Cornell man, if indeed Cornell has sufficient political vitality to continue a factor in the republican problem? The same would be true in the nation, and, therefore, all that seems to me to remain would be the nomination of some neutral man with no color, of good character and little ability—some second Hayes—and I think there are enough Republicans in the country who would be determined not to support any man of that character to insure his defeat. These are my views of the prospects. I am not depressed by them, because I think the country can even stand one term of a democratic administration. I do not believe that party could get itself together, put on its good clothes and good conduct long enough to have any chance of more than one term. I ought to say, also, that when such a condition of things comes as we now have, where really there is no issue of principle between the two parties, it is almost inevitable that the 'ins' shall be turned out by the natural desire of the people to have a change—a desire, of course, intensified by the fact that one party has been in power in the nation for twenty years."

The Next Congress.

The following tables give the relative representation of the two parties in the 48th Congress. It will be seen that the Democrats control the lower house by a large majority, but will not have control of the Senate.

*In the Colorado legislature there is a tie on a joint ballot, and in the legislature of Nebraska, the Anti-monopolists and Independents hold the balance of power. The action of these two legislatures, each of which elect Senators to the 48th Congress, may somewhat change the figures as given above. It will be noticed that the Republicans have been given the benefit of the doubt in the above table.

IN AN ARCTIC GALE.

MELVILLE'S DESCRIPTION OF THE FINAL SEPARATION OF THE JEANETTE'S BOATS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The most interesting feature of Engineer Melville's testimony before the Jeanette Board of Inquiry to-day was his description of the final separation of the boats after leaving Semenovski Island. He said that the wind was blowing a gale from the northeast and the boats were running dead before it, keeping the sails out with boat hooks. He had orders to keep astern of the first cutter, but, as the whaleboat was the faster boat, resort was had to lowering the sail, [illegible] this was done the sea came in over the stern, [illegible] the first cutter on this time the whaleboat was [illegible] and successes ordered the [illegible] down within hail. The sea, however, behind the house. More than equally [illegible] to see the stern, and them had to throw away their caps. Dr. Long, apparently seeing clothes and get their hair cut very [illegible] the states of the whaleboat, waved short. [illegible] hand, as Melville interpreted it,

THE "SUCCESS"

Force and Suction Pump.

Of which we have the exclusive control, is now being extensively used in this county. We have one at our store in Chestertown, where it can be seen at work. These pumps are made of the best material, the cylinders and valves are of brass, the pipe is wrought iron galvanized. No. 1 Pump will throw 40 gallons per minute; No. 2 pumps, 17 gallons per minute. We warrant each and every pump to work satisfactorily for one year in any depth of well, and to force water 100 feet with a rise of 150 feet.

Call and examine this pump ere you will buy no other.

The Best Time

To buy Autumn and Winter Clothing at Oak Hall is at the first of the season, when the stock is full and before cold weather creates a rush of buyers. The woolen market is so short of good materials that the low prices with which we open will be the lowest of the season. One million dollars' worth of clothing and materials await your command. You are equally welcome for a $5 boys' suit or the most liberal custom order.
