The Transcript,

Chestertown, Md.

Thursday, May 6, 1886.

C. G. WOODALL,
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Our 25th Birthday.

The first number of the Transcript was published in May, 1861, and with the last issue the Transcript completed its 25th year. Through an inadvertency, the completed volume has been misnumbered. The Transcript has finished up, however, its first quarter of a century, and it can say that it is now doing a larger, healthier, sounder business than it has ever before done in its history. It has gained friends as it has gone along, and it has now on its lists many subscribers who have stood by it from the beginning. The Transcript is destined to be a live institution of Kent county through the coming years. While the present editor controls its columns, he means to use his best efforts toward making it an institution worthy of the county. And when he shall have passed to that better land where it is understood that all good editors finally take up their abode, he will hand the pen and the scissors over to some other, who in all possibility will use them to better purpose. One hundred years from now, when Chestertown shall have grown to be a live city, and Kent county shall have five times the population which it now contains, THE DAILY TRANSCRIPT will most likely be a live institution of the wide-awake city and county, giving daily the city and county news, and preaching daily the gospel of progress. We sincerely hope that some young Kent countian, who is now breathing the breath of life, may live to see the day.

THE eight-hour labor strike has been inaugurated in a number of cities. It is most general and most violent in Chicago, the hot-bed of Communism, Nihilism and other lunatic isms.

The demand for shortening the hours of human labor is a very reasonable one in most industries, considering that the general over-production indicates that sufficient of all things can be produced with less labor. But the danger in all the large cities, and especially in Chicago, is that the lunatic anarchists and the ignorant demagogues may turn labor strikes into rioting and destruction.

It looks very much as if this were destined to be a year noted in the history of this country for the set fight that will be made between labor and capital. Its progress and its final outcome will be watched with profound interest by all classes in all sections. One thing to an intelligent observer is apparent—a change in social and industrial conditions is sure to come. Possibly the beginning is this year. When the end will be it will take a wise man to tell. The Transcript says so much, not as being a prophet of evil, but as stating a plain fact that must be apparent to him who observes present conditions and indications intelligently.

IN the days when John Kelly was king, the New York Star was undoubtedly a local power in State and city politics. But notwithstanding this, few people, living outside the State of New York, knew there was a New York Star. Several of the New York newspapers are national in their scope and influence, but until recently, the Star did not belong to the list. Under Mr. Dorsheimer, however, the Star has been established upon an ideal of high literary merit, and is working to the front among the great dailies. It undoubtedly means to make itself felt nationally as well as locally. There are upon the Star staff, two prominent journalists, who are very well known to the people of Maryland and Delaware—Mr. W. T. Croasdale, first assistant to the editor in chief, who was formerly editor of the Wilmington Every Evening, and later of the Baltimore Day, and Mr. E. N. Vallandigham, who succeeded Mr. Croasdale as editor of the Every Evening, and who is now night editor on the Star.

SCOTT WAY, secretary of our Peninsula Press Association, formerly a newspaper man, now a literary man at large, started for the Pacific Coast last Tuesday morning, where he expects to make some observations with a view to locating permanently. Mr. Way, every winter has trouble with our Peninsula climate, and though he has derived a good income from writing jokes for Puck about this lovely Peninsula and its climate, the climate has finally backed him square down. During another winter, he has concluded to allow the climate to have its own way unmolested. His present trip will be transient and only for purposes of prospecting. He will return about July 1st, in full time to accompany the Peninsula editors on their annual trip.

POSTMASTER VEAZEY has quietly stepped down from the Baltimore postoffice, and Mr. Frank Brown has as quietly succeeded him. The reason given for Mr. Veazey's resignation, is that he could not attend to his law practice and his postoffice duties together, and he thought it better to keep his law practice than to keep the postoffice. Mr. Frank Brown is a young man, a stalwart Democrat, and one whose appointment it is believed will give general satisfaction. The quiet resignation and the quiet appointment, both came as a surprise to Maryland politicians. Maryland delegations are said to be as dreadful to the President, as a Salvation Army is to a saloon keeper. Whenever he can skip a Maryland delegation, he does so without any conscientious scruples.

BALTIMORE last week had a half-million-dollar fire, on the north side of Baltimore street between Liberty and Howard. Some costly business structures and some costly wares went in the flames. The property was largely covered with insurance. The burned site will probably arise from the ashes in much handsomer form than before the fire.

THE GREAT STRIKE.

Upwards of One Hundred Thousand Men in the Movement.

MONDAY, MAY 3D.—The movement for eight hours, which was inaugurated on Saturday and will continue to-day, is very general, especially in the West. It is estimated that upwards of 100,000 workmen are engaged in the movement, and there is every indication that this great army will grow to a much larger magnitude.

In Chicago many thousands of workmen are idle. The trades most affected are the furniture manufacturers, the lumber interests and the iron men, although every business in the city is implicated. The railroads, too, are great sufferers, for the freight handlers have, for the most part, joined the movement. There is a practical lockout in the furniture factories, and it is estimated that 7,500 men there are clamoring for eight hours and no reduction of pay. A somewhat similar situation exists in the box factories and planing mills. A special committee of the Lumbermen's Exchange decided not to grant the demands, and an immense procession made the rounds of the lumber yards on Saturday and all the workmen quit. The strike involves 12,000 men, mostly Poles, Bohemians and Germans and the most dangerous element of Chicago.

Many of these are Socialists and red flags were carried in their procession. They held a mass meeting in the afternoon and some of the orators favored the destruction of the lumber yards where their demands were refused. Although there have been some concessions among the iron men, for the most part the mills are closed. Five hundred freight handlers marched on the Wabash yards, where they were joined by more strikers, and the procession growing continually made the circuit of the railroads and gathered in a good proportion of their brethren. The men in the pork packing establishments are making their demands, but have not as yet received their answer. The exact status of the movement in Chicago cannot be determined until to-day.

Six hundred employees of furniture factories in Cincinnati have started the movement there, which is expected to spread. In Milwaukee 3,000 malsters and brewers have struck for an advance of wages and in Detroit 250 journeymen brewers have quit work. The furniture manufacturers of St. Louis have granted eight hours on a like basis of pay. All the St. Louis plumbers have struck. The men in the planing mills are expected to quit to-day. The men employed in the East St. Louis Water Works have stopped. Nearly all the furniture factories in Pittsburg and Allegheny City are idle and the carpenters will strike to day.

The movement in the East has not yet assumed great proportions, but unless the demands of the laborers are conceded or there are mutual concessions great strikes are looked for during the week. In New York, Boston and Baltimore, there is much uneasiness, and especially in New York the workingmen are clamoring for a reduction of the hours of labor without a proportionate reduction in wages. There was an immense mass meeting in Union Square on Saturday night and the speakers, the principal of whom was John Swinton, called loudly for their rights.

The eight-hour system was inaugurated in Philadelphia Monday. Between thirty-five and forty of the cabinet manufacturers have acceded to the demands of the cabinet makers. The big manufacturers, however, will resist the demand and it is probable there will be a great strike. The garment-cutters, over one thousand in number, inaugurated a strike Monday morning, claiming ten hours' pay for eight hours' work. In the event of the strikers being successful it is believed that such a result will stimulate the eight-hour movement and that it will extend to many other branches of trade. The journeymen carpenters are holding out for nine hours a day and the movement in this direction is growing every day.

Want to Be Examined.

Hon. James B. Groome, collector of customs at Baltimore, on Thursday of last week addressed a communication to the civil service commissioners at Washington in relation to application blanks for persons who ask to go before the local examiners in this city at their sitting on May 19. He says 350 application papers have been furnished to his office since February 20, all of which were distributed to applicants. About 180 have been filled out and returned as formal applications, and the conclusion is a fair one that a very large percentage will not be used by those to whom they were distributed.

Collector Groome says: "The legislation relating to appointments to the classified civil service is not and never has been popular in Maryland, and the fact that gentlemen who think—and whose friends sustain them in thinking—that they ought to be able to obtain positions in the public service, without undergoing the formality of a competitive examination, cannot even obtain the privilege of presenting themselves for such examination, is being used industriously and with decided effect by the opponents of such legislation to increase its unpopularity. The strongest ground upon which to sustain such legislation is that it affords to every citizen of proper age equality of right and of opportunity to demonstrate his fitness for, and thereby to obtain, an official position. I cannot but think that good policy requires at the next examination here that all qualified persons who desire to apply for such examination should be afforded an opportunity to do so. If the adoption of such a course should somewhat increase the labor of the local examiners, and result in furnishing to the custom officials here a much larger number of eligibles for positions in the classified service than can reasonably hope to receive appointments in the government employ, it will at least have the compensating advantage of enabling those officials here charged with the appointing power to fill such vacancies as may arise from eligibles shown by competitive examination to possess greater average ability and skill than could be obtained if the number of persons allowed to be examined had been more restricted. This pressure for an opportunity to be examined is largely attributable to the recent change in the political complexion of the national administration, and to the fact that the civil service reform legislation has not been long in force, and is but imperfectly understood. I do not think this demand for examination, if yielded to now, would be likely to exist again in the near future in anything like its present extent."

Mr. Charles Frederick Adams, acting chief examiner of the civil service commission, replying to Collector Groome, says the board, in consideration of the statements of the collector, will send an additional supply of application blanks to Baltimore. The instructions are that none but intending applicants shall get them, and applications must be filed with the local examiner by May 12.
