THE FRUIT-GROWERS OF STILL POND DEAL WITH THE PEACH QUESTION.

Ways and Means for Distributing the Crop.

A recent meeting of the Still Pond Agricultural and Horticultural Association appointed a committee to report a plan to secure the better distribution of the Peninsula fruit crop. On last Saturday the committee made the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

Your committee to whom was referred the subject of a systematic or more thorough distribution of fruits, and especially of peaches, beg leave to say that they have had this subject under consideration, and report as follows:

That your committee, realizing the fact that a much greater territory is now devoted to the cultivation of the peach than at any former period, and that in the near future when the millions of young trees recently planted come into bearing, a much greater quantity of fruit will be thrown on our markets than our present system of shipping and distributing can dispose of at a profit.

To meet the growing necessities of this case, and to provide for a proper and systematic distribution of this increasing surplus, calls for the wisest counsels and united action, not only of the fruit-growers and shippers, but of the managers of railroads and transportation companies as well. Fully believing that these companies have it in their power to either increase or diminish the quantity now grown and shipped, we ask that they meet us in a friendly spirit of inquiry, examination and adjustment of such plans as will conduce to our common or mutual interest.

Your committee are painfully conscious that heavy losses have been incurred in the past by growers in shipping indiscriminately to irresponsible commission houses. We offer it as our unbiased judgment that this traffic suffers by a surplus of this element, many of whom lack experience, ability and proper understanding of business principles so essential to success.

Therefore, in order to meet these contingencies, and to provide for a wise, prudent and systematic distribution and shipment of our fruit in such a way that gluts in any market may be avoided in the future, your committee recommend that, in order to start this ball of reform in motion, the Still Pond Agricultural and Horticultural Association resolve itself into a District Distributive Club (without in any manner changing its present character), and issue a circular letter, addressed to the Delaware Fruit Exchange, granges, agricultural, horticultural and kindred associations, throughout Delaware, Maryland and New Jersey, and also to fruit dealers or shippers generally (who should become members of the above named organizations). And in sections where such associations do not exist, we advise that district distributive associations be formed. The object of this circular letter is to solicit correspondence and co-operation of all the above named organizations in this important movement, extending invitation to all such to send representatives to a convention to be held at Still Pond, Kent county, Md., May 4th, 1887, at 10 o'clock A. M., said body to be composed of three delegates from each such organization, in the proportion of not less than two growers to one shipper or dealer. And when so assembled to proceed at once to organize by electing a president, treasurer, secretary and board of directors; and to adopt a constitution, by-laws and rules of order, not conflicting in any manner with the principles of the above named organizations. In order that a clearer understanding of the cardinal purposes and objects of this movement may be had, your committee recommend that our organization urge upon the convention the discussion and adoption of something like the following: 1st. That it provide for ascertaining, as accurately as possible, the number of carloads of peaches each city, town or shipping point can daily consume, that can be reached by our fastest railroad trains, carrying the fruit in good order, without glutting such markets. 2d. That it also adopt a plan for obtaining the names or the titles of the prominent or responsible commission houses in such places. 3d. That it cause a map to be made, locating prominently all the above named shipping points, with figures attached denoting number of carloads each place can consume to advantage. 4th. That it locate some central point for business deemed most practicable, where telegraphic communication is complete with available shipping points in the peach territory and also with places of shipment. 5th. That it will secure at good salary a suitable person (who shall be known by the title of distributor) to locate at this point during shipping seasons, of competent business qualifications, who shall be assisted by the necessary clerical force, to conduct this business promptly and successfully. The distributor shall be required to bond in such sum as the board of directors shall determine for the faithful discharge of his duties. 6th. That the treasurer shall be required to bond in such sum as the board may require from time to time, covering the amount that may at any time come into his possession. 7th. That when the peaches are ready for shipment, by a pre-arranged plan it shall be the privilege of any member of our organization, upon loading a car at any point, to telegraph the distributor that he wishes to ship car No.——from——station to ——city, who will at once consult his map or list, and if its quota is not already filled, adds this car as one to be shipped to that place and so inform him, but if the quota for that town is already full, he advises him to that effect, when the owner may select some other point, as in like manner before, and so continue until the destination of his car is located. If however he cannot be suited he may ship at his own option and independent of the organization. But if the owner does not remain at the station till its destination is determined the distributor shall use his best judgment in shipping the same. 8th. That as a means of raising funds to defray the expenses of the business, and for creating a fund for emergencies we advise that all who become members of the organization, or who avail themselves of the benefits this system confers, shall be required to subscribe to the stock of the organization to the amount of not less than $10, for which he shall receive a certificate, and that a charge of one cent per basket shall be made and retained by the association for all fruit shipped or sold through it. 9th. That the president by the sanction of the board of directors shall select from the list of commission houses already obtained as many and such firms as are deemed adequate at each point of shipment to sell the fruit and transact the business to the best advantage; requiring all such parties to give bond for the faithful discharge of their duties; and to make daily returns of all net proceeds arising from such sales to the treasurer.

10th. That it negotiate with such firms for lower rates of commission than are now charged.

11th. That it provide for the reception of telegrams daily quoting prices and condition of the various markets for the benefit of its members, and no others.

12th. That this association make itself responsible for the net proceeds of all fruit shipped and sold by its bonded agencies.

13th. That all money thus realized from the sale of fruit by this organization shall be paid to the treasurer by the firms selling the same and by him to the owners or shippers.

14th. That this association shall become a legally incorporated body. In conclusion this association most cordially invite commission merchants interested and representatives from the various railroad and transportation companies to seats in our convention to take part in the discussion of the various questions pertaining to this important interest, and we will respectfully consider any suggestions bearing on this question they may make, in order that some practical plan may be inaugurated that will best subserve the objects and interests of this association and meet the just requirements and necessities of all concerned. But this privilege shall not confer the right of franchise or membership. And we earnestly hope that every peach grower will make this cause his own and by all honorable and legitimate means work for the success of this laudable enterprise.

N. BARNARD,
JAMES S. HARRIS,
J. FRANK WILSON,
Committee.

This report having been adopted, Mr. N. Barnard offered the following resolution, which was adopted without a dissenting voice:

Resolved, That the Still Pond Agricultural and Horticultural Association, this 5th day of February, 1887, assumes the character of a District Distributive Club, without changing the original purpose or intentions in any respect, except to invite the co-operation of kindred associations and fruit-growers to the end that the organization of peach-growers may become an accomplished fact, for the purpose of securing a more practical and systematic distribution of this fruit over a more extended field, so as to prevent, as far as possible the glutting of our markets.

Alsike Clover for Profit.

Dr. W. G. Phelps, in Practical Farmer.

The attention of farmers and bee keepers was brought to the above subject in a previous article, but the merits of alsike are so conspicuous, and there is so much to be said in its favor, that it is impossible to refrain. Bee keeping is so generally becoming an auxilliary of good farming, that what interests one pursuit must the other in many cases. Alsike clover stands upon its own merits as a valuable plant to the farmer. Whether harvested as hay or used as a fertilizer in improving our land, it stands pre-eminently ahead of the ordinary species of red clover. It is only necessary to call attention to the cuts below (kindly loaned us by American Bee Journal of Chicago), illustrative of the different root habit of the two varieties to prove the latter proposition, while all who have used alsike as hay can arrive at but the one conclusion, that it is far superior to red clover. Alsike clover (Trifolium Hybridum) originated in Sweeden, where it was found growing wild; therefore it might be relied on as hardy and productive. It is now extensively cultivated all over Europe, and its use becoming extensive in many parts of the United States. When cured as hay it does not become dark like clover, but remains the color of well cured timothy. In the latitude of Chicago it ripens towards the last of July, but need not be cut until August. As remarked in previous article, it is an admirable grass to sow with timothy, ripening at the same time and making a delicious hay. The timothy supports the alsike and prevents all trouble in lodging. If desirous of saving the seeds pure of the latter (which in no way injures it for hay) it should be cut a little earlier than otherwise. It can very happily be combined with red clover, acting as a mulch, and protecting the latter from the "heaving out" process, that often proves so destructive to it in winter. When sown 4 pounds seed to the acre is ample. With timothy or other clover, 2 pounds. My seed, purchased from Johnson & Stokes, Phila., has usually cost me 25 cents per pound, but in large quantities should be procured at some discount from the above. M. M. Baldridge, of Illinois, to whom I am indebted for some of the above facts regarding alsike, has cultivated it extensively for 17 years, and says of it: "Alsike clover is a plant that every farmer should grow, whether he keeps bees or not, as it is far superior to the common red for hay, seed or pasturage for all kinds of stock." It resists drouth far better than almost any variety of grass known. Has a habit similar to the white clover, of reseeding itself, and is perfectly hardy, being able to resist the freezing and thawing so detrimental to other kinds of clover. I am abundantly able to attest its value as hay and pasturage. Equally valuable is it as a pasturage for bees. I attribute the unusual excellence of my honey crop in 1886 and its ready sale to the fact of its being gathered to a considerable extent from alsike clover bloom on my own premises. L. C. Root, of Mohawk, N. Y., whose bees annually produce upwards of 10,000 lbs., says of alsike: "I have never been so thoroughly convinced of the value of alsike clover as at present. Aside from its superior merits as a farm product, the quality of honey it produces cannot be surpassed, and I have tested it thoroughly." It is to be hoped that all progressive farmers will try the alsike, and that every wide-awake bee keeper will encourage its growth by every means in his power. Its cultivation will be of mutual benefit to all.

No. 2.—THE ROOTS OF ALSIKE. Red Clover at the right.

In addition to the above, the thought suggests itself that alsike will prove the dernier resort on lands said to be "clover sick," and that consequently refuse to grow successfully the red variety. If of any service to the public I may say that farmers and others interested and wishing to examine samples of hay produced from alsike, and also the clover growing, can do so on my premises. W. G. PHELPS.
