Pitchers: Some can't count, can't remember—Campy

NEW YORK—The many problems confronting a catcher in the major leagues are related in vivid detail by Roy Campanella in an interesting piece in the Saturday Evening Post.

The article, ghost-written by Milton Gross of the New York Post, carries the byline of the Brooklyn Dodgers' three - time National League "most valuable player." It says in part:

"TAKE THE simple matter of signs.

"Did I say simple? Well, it's not.

"Some folks think we sign one for a fast ball; two for a curve; the way it used to be done on the sandlots. If that were the case, the other teams would know every pitch that was coming after the first few batters got up there.

"To confuse them you must be a little complicated, but then you run into the problem of how complicated you can get without confusing your pitcher, too.

* * *

"WHEN DON BESSENT'S pitching for us, I got to make it easy for him. He can't see too good. Karl Spooner sees good enough, but I can't use too many flashes in the sign. He says he misses the movement in my fingers.

"With Billy Loes, who had arm trouble this spring, I don't suppose it makes too much difference. When he gets mad he'll cross me up. With him, I go to be ready for anything.

"The pitchers aren't machines whose buttons can be pushed to make them do what you want. Some shake their heads, indicating they have the sign. They step back on the mound and go into their windup, and when they get to the top of it they've entirely forgotten what was called for a split second before.

* * *

"SOME PITCHERS just can't count. Some just can't remember.

"I try to tell those who have that kind of trouble, 'If you have any doubt, why get on the mound and pitch? Give me some indication that you haven't caught the sign.'

"When I think of such lost moments, my experiences with Loes come back to me.

"Here is a pitcher who should have been winning 20 games a season right along. He has the best curve, the best fast ball and he knows baseball, but he's stubborn and has ideas all his own. Many times I can't even guess what he's thinking about.

* * *

"ONE GAME last year against the Cardinals I see that Ken Boyer on first base is getting anxious. I figure he wants to go for second. We have signs for pick-off plays at the bases, and I flash to Loes to get the runner back.

"Boyer was third in the league in stolen bases last year, with 22, and a guy like that you got to watch.

"A catcher gets to know these things. Even somebody like the Braves' Eddie Mathews, who won't run ordinarily, will try for a steal if the pitcher relaxes. Billy Bruton will go at the time he gets a running start.

"With a man like Richie Ashburn, of the Phillies, I'll hold up my sign to the pitcher watch him a while. I can darned near say when Ashburn will run.

"Anyway, I figured out a way the sign to check the runner on first, but instead he should go to the mound immediately and threw to the hitter.

* * *

"TO THIS DAY I don't know how I caught that ball. I wasn't expecting it.

"I called time and walked out to the mound. 'You looking at me,' I asked Billy.

"'Right at you,' Loes says.

"'Didn't you see the sign to hold the runner on?'

"'I didn't see a thing,' Loes says, 'but tell you what—try me out again. Give me that sign once more and see how I make out!'"

Archie Moore in honeymoon hotel

Archie Moore breezed into London for a little warmer weather, it has been too cold.

"If I beat Pompey, I will retire and concentrate on the rock-ribbed heavyweight title.

"I have beaten all the leading contenders.

"Since Rocky Marciano has retired, I cannot see how my claim can be disputed.

"I expect to fight for the world title next September.

Patterson in camp switch

MONTICELLO, N.Y. — Floyd Patterson, young heavyweight title contender from Brooklyn, launched a new phase of his training program here, Thursday, moving from Greenwood Lake.

The 21-year-old former Olympic champion is preparing for an elimination contest against Hurricane Jackson. The bout is slated for New York's Madison Square Garden June 8, and is designed to lead to a showdown to Rocky Marciano who retired last month.

Floyd admitted he came here as a money saving move. He said the quarters at Greenwood Lake were more than he could afford.

Patterson and his manager, Cus D'Amato reported that for the three weeks Floyd was lodged at the Greenwood Lake inn, it was costing the fighter a minimum of $108 a day to maintain his retinue.
