Saudis refuse black, Jewish U.S. workers

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — Jewish, black and female workers have been disqualified from a state plan to send as many as 500 soon-to-be unemployed highway engineers to Saudi Arabia to build roads, a transportation department official said.

Robert Best, chief deputy of the department, said Saudi policy is "not to issue a visa to anyone connected with the Israeli government.

"Anyone who is Jewish is automatically connected with the Israeli government in the eyes of the Saudis," said Best.

"Another aspect of the situation is we would want to protect Jewish people by not sending them there because it is a very emotional issue," Best said.

Robert Cassano, planning engineer for the department's division of structures, said blacks and women also are being excluded because blacks aren't welcome in the country and "women definitely don't participate in the business life of the Saudis."

Officials said about 1,000 employes have indicated an interest in the Saudi project.

The department must cut its work force by 2,800.

It was disclosed earlier by next July.

that the financially troubled department is working on a proposal to send people to work in the oil-rich country while they technically remain on the state payroll.

The Saudi government would pay their salaries, fringe benefits and living expenses, but the employes would be allowed to keep their state seniority and vested retirement rights.

The project could last up to two years.
