Mc Clarrin tapped for HEW post

WASHINGTON

Otto McClarrin, a veteran public relations executive, has been named associate administrator for communications and public affairs of Health, Education and Welfare's Health Services Administration (HSA).

The appointment was announced last week by Dr. George I. Lythcott, HSA administrator.

As HSA's principal communications official, McClarrin will be responsible for developing and administrating the public affairs activities for the varied health services programs of a $2 billion agency.

HSA's 21 programs run the gamut from direct health care, technical and financial assistance to communities, assigning medical manpower to shortage areas, to family planning, migrant and child health.

McClarrin brings to his new post experience in newspaper, art, foreign, service, community relations and public relation fields.

Otto McClarrin

Before joining HSA in 1973, he has served with the Office of Economic Opportunity, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, United States Information Agency and Howard University.

He began his career at the age of 14 when he was cartoonist, writer and columnist for the Philadelphia Independent. Throughout high school and college he served in similar jobs with the Philadelphia Tribune and the AFRO-AMERICAN Newspapers.

Immediately following military service in World War II, Mr. McClarrin served as editor - in - chief of Newspic Magazine, Newspic, the first black publication to break into the four - color advertising field, was forerunner of many black magazines — including Ebony.

Following this, he worked as assistant editor of Consumer Reports Magazine, and later served as a foreign service officer in Indonesia.

McClarrin became the munications official for an independent U.S. Government agency when he was appointed director of information for the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights in 1968.

In recent years, his activities have been generally confined to public relations and civic efforts but he still maintains a weekly health column syndicated by the National Newspaper Publishers Association News Service.

McClarrin was born in Atlanta, reared in Philadelphia and graduated from Howard University. He did graduate work in public relations and communications at American University.

OIC drive target: One million jobs for youth

PHILADELPHIA — One million youth job placements and one million written appeals to President Carter and the Congress to target federal dollars for youth jobs and training are the dual goals of a nationwide campaign launched by OIC of America.

Rev. Leon H. Sullivan

At a press conference here last week, Rev. Leon H. Sullivan, founder and chairman of OIC, detailed plans for community "Help Our Youth" rallies which will be held during the week of March 25 in 200 cities where Opportunities Industrialization Centers for the disadvantaged are located.

OIC's national clergy committee will initiate the rallies in local churches with the involvement of elected officials; business, industry and community leaders; organizations; and interested citizens.

At the rallies, and over a 100 - day campaign, unemployed youths will be matched with specific job opportunities within firms ranging from major corporations to small local businesses and then enlisted to undertake OIC training to qualify them for the pledged employment.

Simultaneously, attempts will be to obtain one million signatures appealing for Presidential and Congressional action to establish a national youth policy with adequate funding.

The campaign is aimed at reaching school drop - outs, juvenile offenders, welfare family youths and young veterans under 21 years of age.

"America has three million unemployed young people," Rev. Sullivan declared, "and up to 60 percent of our minority youths are unemployed. The danger of a permanent underclass of Americans swelling the welfare rolls and overflowing the unemployment offices is one we cannot afford to ignore."

Citing OIC's 15 - year history of providing job training for some 500,000 individuals, one - third of whom came off the welfare rolls, the Baptist minister, who is on the board of General Motors, said he would personally "knock on the doors" of major industrialists as he did when he solicited the job pledges which enabled him to establish the first OIC self - help facility in 1964 in Philadelphia.

"Only this time," he noted, "I have the backing of an OIC national industrial advisory council representing more than 30 of America's top business enterprises.

"The strategy of this program," Rev. Sullivan said, "is simple. One million youths, holding productive jobs, will add billions and billions of dollars in new wages and taxes to the American economy."

The job pledges and appeal signatures generated by the campaign are to be presented to President Carter during OIC's annual convocation June 10 - 14 in Washington by a committee of 100 clergy leaders representing all faiths and denominations.

At the same time, senators and congressmen will be petitioned and Vice President Mondale and House Speaker Tip O'Neill will be asked to receive the appeals on behalf of their colleagues in a ceremony on the steps of the Capitol Building.

Rev. Sullivan told the press that it will take OIC five years to reach the goal of one million youths placed on jobs "if we get the support we need from the private sector, the prime sponsors, the states and the federal government."

He said the "Help Our Youth" campaign will involve all other community - based organizations of demonstrated effectiveness in job training and job placement, to the extent that they wish to partielipate. "Their participation will be welcome," he said.

Approximately 8,000 delegates and supporters are expected to attend the June convocation.

"We hope to stir the consciences and lift the sights of the decision makers and our nation's leaders beyond 'meat - ax' percentage cuts in the federal budget. We want them to be selective in their anti - inflation targeting and not sacrifice our youth on the altar of anti - inflation policies and balanced budgets," Rev. Sullivan said.

—Reg Williams

United Way, said that "since Reggie came in 1976 our affirmative action program has continued to increase in its effectiveness."

United Way affirmative action policies were attacked during the summer of '78 by the Interdenominational

Ministerial Alliance (IMA).

The IMA proposed to the United Way that it create a new umbrella agency "Inner-City Associated Charities" that would have received a percentage of funds from United Way every year and then distribute the funds to minority controlled agencies.

But the pocposal was turned down by United Way.

Williams is also a commentator on Baltimore's WJZ-TV Evening Magazine and a member of the State NAACP.

Mitchell and Young became the sixth and seventh black politicians whose names have been "floated" as possible candidates for the city's number two spot.

Recently, freshman Delegate Frank Conaway said he was seriously considering running for the post and would "make a formal announcement in a couple of weeks."

Mitchell, Young and Conaway join City Council Vice President Clarence "Du" Burns, Henry G. Parks, head of Parks Sausage Company; John Perron, pead of the city's Community Relations Commission and City Solicitor Benjamin Brown as possible candidates.

Dr. Cobb Naval Academy speaker

ANNAPOLIS — Dr. William Montague Cobb, president of the NAACP and recipient of the Navy's highest civilian award, the Distinguished Public Service Award, was the keynote speaker last Tuesday in Mahan Hall, as part of the Naval Academy's continuing observance of Black History Month.

Dr. Cobb, a former professor of anatomy in the Howard University College of Medicine, and head of its anatomy department for 22 years, was the first to be elevated to the rank of Distinguished Professor at Howard.
