Elegant Roads—Hospitality of the Scottish People—Falkirk—Scotland's Memorable Battle Fields—Ancient Stirling, the Beautiful Key to the Lovely Highlands, and the Former Home of Kings.

BY PROF. IRVING L. TWILLEY.

NUMBER IX.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TRANSCRIPT.]

"What excellent roads have the British Isles!" This is an expression often heard among the American tourists, and truly, our proud America must blushingly bow her noble head in shame and envy when Uncle Sam peeps over Benjamin's big hat, and sees the beautifully made country roads bounded by substantially constructed stone fences, in a country which was compelled to surrender to our invincible Washington more than a hundred years ago. These roads are very pretty, viewed from the lock-up on wheels, but they are more appreciated in a drive or tramp.

My tramp from Glasgow to Falkirk, a distance of about thirty miles, revealed to me the true beauty of Scottish husbandry, true comfort of good roads, and the true condition of the working man of Europe. Yes, the roads are excellent—much better than the major portion of the pavements which adorn the broad streets of fair Chestertown. Yet, they are trodden by men and women who, after working during the day, do not receive sufficient compensation to buy a square meal and pay their railroad fare.

Towards night of my first day's tramp, I was overtaken by a good man, who inquired if it was not fatiguing to carry a heavy satchel such a long distance. I answered it was, but I was in pretty hard luck and must make the best of it. He said so was he, which I am sure was the case. He told me he had been working in Glasgow six months, and being thrown out of work, he had not enough money to pay his way to Edinburgh, whence he was bound to see his family and secure work. He was no beggar, for he supposed I was in the same luck as himself, and tried to console me by saying we could help some farmer after we had walked about ten miles farther for something to eat. You can imagine his surprise when I invited him in a restaurant by the roadside for refreshments, and he surely proved what he had told me, that he had not tasted food for two days.

As I was wending my way, I met a husbandman at work; I stopped to chat with him about rural doings in Scotland and to take a rest. It proved during our conversation, that I was acquainted with his son, who is now living in La Rue county, Kentucky, U. S. A. The tears streamed down the old gentleman's face, as I told him of his boy's prosperity in America. He insisted that I should spend the night with them, and in the morning he would take me to my destination. He said it was bad to be in a foreign country without money or friends. He sympathized with me so much, but seemed perfectly astonished that I should not know another of his sons who is living in Nevada—both living in America.

I believe the Scottish people are the grandest people on earth. They are so kind, and treat a stranger with such respect and give him such a friendly reception. You scarcely meet a family that some of their family have not emigrated to America, and the parents are always happy to hear glad tidings from what they believe to be a most wonderful country—America. Yet, living in the comparative small countries, they cannot conceive the magnitude of America.

On my third day's journey, I met an attractive-looking lady of about twenty summers, who was walking to Edinburgh from Glasgow, a distance of fifty two miles. I learned she was a bride of six months and was running away from her husband to seek work in a laundry at Edinburgh. She had no money, nor had had anything to eat that day. Her reason for making the journey under such circumstances, was that she thought it would be easier to support one than two. So you see marriage is a failure (?) in Europe as well as America.

FALKIRK, SCOTLAND,

is a town which dates to the thirteenth century. Wallace was defeated at Falkirk by the English under Edward I., in 1298. It is "quaint," built with narrow, crooked streets. All the buildings are stone, and their appearance speaks of their age. The CARRON Iron Works are one mile from this town. Many sights of interest are nearby, and the most beautiful scenery on every hand displays the handiwork of God. We shall make Falkirk our headquarters for a few days, with my friends, Mrs. Laird and family, who are residents of this beautiful country town, while we visit with Miss Martha Laird, a charming young lassie, who has volunteered to act as guide to the many historical places of interest within a small radius of Falkirk. In this, the northern part of Scotland, twilight reigns supreme. In the summer time, you can read a newspaper by twilight at nine o'clock P. M., and it is not dark much before twelve. How delightful to sit upon the door stoops and enjoy a cool refreshing breeze in twilight's gentle sway, five hours after our friends in America have sought their peaceful slumbers! Our first trip was to

STIRLING CASTLE, AT STIRLING.

This old castle is prominently connected with the most important events of Scottish history. It was the royal residence of the Scottish kings and the favorite home of the Stewart line. It is a key to the Highlands, and stands amid the greatest battle fields of Scotland, in trying, as America did do, to throw off the English yoke. After passing inside the immense walls, the first thing to attract the visitor's attention is the palace built by James V. It is decorated with unique, grotesque sculptured figures. From it, a covered way leads to the Lions' Den and Ladies' Lookout battery, which overlooks the wildest part of the steep rock, upon which the castle is erected. Opposite the palace, is the Parliament House, which faces the Chapel Royal and built by James III. The Douglas room is a noted spot of the castle, and visitors are always conducted in the room and closet where James II. stabbed the Earl of Douglas in 1452. Says Scott in the Lady of the Lake:

"Ye towers within whose circuit dread,
A Douglas by his sovereign bled."

Ascending a flight of steps, you arrive at the west look-out, called Victoria View, named and subscribed in commemoration of the visit made by Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, and the Prince Consort in 1842. Continuing to the end of the walk, you behold an aperture in the wall, known as Queen Mary's look-out, where the beautiful Queen Mary Stuart, who afterwards fell a victim to Queen Bess' brutal axe, viewed the sports and parks when a resident in Stirling castle. We shall say more of the virgin queen and the murdered queen during our travels in England. As we stand on this rampart, and behold the beautiful grassy knoll immediately beyond the castle, our hearts throb with awe, as pretty Miss Laird informs us that this is Heading Hill, the place of execution from an early date. In 1425, during the reign of James I, the Duke of Aibany, with his two sons and his father-in-law, the Earl of Lenox, an old man in his eightieth year, fell beneath the deadly axe on this now beautiful eminence.

Beyond this, the Bridge of the Allen makes a lovely picture, with the noble Grampians in the west forming a beautiful background. A few steps forward, and we see the flag waving over the about two miles distant, where that ever-memorable battle was fought on the 24th of June, 1314, between the English army numbering 100,000 under Edward II, and the Scots under Robert Bruce numbering 40,000. Every student of history remembers how King Robert caused the pits to be dug and covered with brush to defend his army, while King Edward II was rendezvousing with his army at Falkirk. Edward was too confident of his strength, as was General Gage in the Battle of Bunker Hill, in 1775, at Boston, U. S. A. Now, standing upon the battle field of one of the world's important battles—Bannockburn—we cannot refrain from musing upon those lines which so appropriately describes the strength of the hero—Robert Bruce.

"High in his stirrups stood the king,
And gave his battle axe the swing
Right on the Bonne; the whiles he pass'd
Fell that stern shot—the first, the last!
Such strength upon the blow was put,
The helmet crash'd like hazel-nut;
The axe shaft, with its brazen clasp,
Was shiver'd to the gauntlet's grasp:
Springs from the blow, the startled horse,
Drops to the plain the lifeless corpse:
First of the fatal field, how soon,
How sudden fell the fierce De Bonne!"

We now wend our way to

THE WALLACE MONUMENT,

which is situated on Abbey Craig, a beautiful wooded height about two miles from Stirling. The foundation was laid on June 24, 1861, the anniversary of the Battle of Bannockburn, by the Duke of Athole but was not completed until 1869. It is 220 feet in height and the craig upon which it is built is equally as high, from the top of the tower one of the prettiest views ever seen by man is presented. The winding links of the pacific Forth extend as far as the eye can reach as they quietly flow through the picturesque valley of Monteith by the distant Grampions, studied with Ben Lamond, Ben Ledi and Ben Cruachan. The battle fields of seven prominent battles may be seen as the rivers Forth and Teith shine like silver in level carse before you. Facing the "sunny south," and sheltered from the northern blasts by wooded hills lie is ancient Bridge of Allen, while the far west is walled by numerous mountain peaks. Standing in this tower, a panorama of grandeur was presented to our view more beautiful than our pen can tell. It was the setting sun silently sinking beyond the lofty Ben Lamond tinting the mountains with heath, and making the horizon a mass of liquid fire. What beauty! What grandeur! What sublimity! In the Hall of heroes of this monument we noticed the bust of many eminent Scotsmen among which was that of Robert Burns, 1759–'96, presented by millionaire Homestead (U. S. A) Andrew Carnegie, and that of Sir Walter Scott, 1771–1832, by Mrs. Carnegie. But these were insignificant to that great William Wallace sword which is here sacredly kept in memory of the noble deeds of that hero. It measures 5 feet 6½ inches in length and is 2¼ inches broad at the top, narrowing to ¾ of an inch at the point. It is as much as an ordinary man can carry, and no wonder a man who could dexterously handle such an instrument of death, could not be captured until betrayed while sleeping at Robroyston, in 1305, and a price set upon his head by the King of England. Though defeated at the battle of Falkirk, he won a glorious victory for his countrymen at Stirling, and did much to throw off the bitter oppression of England. Though reverently honored by his countrymen, no monument made of stone that they can erect, can perpetuate his memory more than the terrible death he suffered at the hands of the haughty English, who condemned him to a most brutal death on the charge of treason. But was he a traitor? Did he own any allegiance to the infamous King Edward who trembled at his presence? Be this as it may, on the 23d of August, 1305, he was heavily ironed, placed on a hurdle and dragged behind horses to the Elms in Smithfield, the place of execution. He was first hanged from the gallows, then cut down while breathing; his bowels torn out and burned before his face. His head was then struck off and his body divided into four quarters. His head was afterwards placed upon a pole on the London bridge, and his limbs sent to be exposed to public view at New Castle, Berwick, Perth and Aberdeen. No one should visit Stirling without visiting, which is one of the old historical buildings dating from the fourteenth century. James VI., of Scotland, afterwards James I., of England, was crowned here when the royal infant was only 13 months and 10 days old, in 1567. The celebrated John Knox preached an elegant sermon on the occasion.

THE HIGH CHURCH,

It was my intention to write about the telegraph system, which is so different from the States, but as I have already intruded upon your space, and my cute little guide is waiting to further entertain the scribe, I will write an account of that in my next number, which will be written from Edinburgh; thence I proceed to London, Paris and Switzerland, from which places I will try to write you more interesting letters.

MRS. SANTA CLAUS ASSERTS HERSELF.

Oh, it's all very fine for that husband of mine
To be courted and praised and invited to dine;
Though late in the day, I'll take while I may
My woman's one privilege of "saying her say."

It's "Santa Claus, dear,"—"ah, no, Santa Claus here,"
(Pray pardon this poor little ticklesome tear.)
Complimentary strife is the breath of his life,
But whoever mentions his desolate wife.

Now I've something to say in a slanderous way
Of the man I have promised to love and obey;
He's a jolly old soul, he acts up to his role,
And as husbands go, he may pass, on the whole.

Oh, I'd never have spoken—my heart might have broken,
I'd have died without leaving one remnant or token
Did a gossip not say in my hearing one day,
"Santa Claus is a bachelor, tireless and gay."

"You mistake," was my cry, with a flash of the eye,
"I'm his patient and hard-working wife, by-the-by;
And the world I will stun, when the gamut I run
Of all I've suffered and all I've done."

My sufferings first, with heart nigh to burst,
Each Christmas eve brings me the sharpest and worst:
When, equipped for a start, I see him depart,
While my tremulous hands seek my quivering heart,

"Be careful," I say, "You grow stouter each day."
(We women must smile though our heart strings give way)
Tight-fit chimneys, you know, you must surely forego;
Or be roasted alive by the fire below.

"And my darling," I add, "remember the bad
Attack of bronchitis you recently had:
And button your coat high up at the throat,
And don't cross the stream when the ice is afloat.

"And keep a tight rein on my Lady Disdain.—
Look, dear, she is kicking the dashboard again."
But away he has sped, heeding naught I have said,
While visions of widowhood dance in my head.

Is it nothing, I ask, that my husband should bask,
In the popular smile, like a belle at the masque,
While I, poor old crone, sit and cower alone,
Tight clasping the fingers I've worked to the bone?

With a nod and a blink he would lead you to think
He had dressed all the dolls ere a weasel could wink;
No; while he's in bed—to his shame be it said—
It is I who am plying the needle and thread.

He goes shopping so grand through the length of the land,
But all matters of tastefulness fall to my hand.
Could he crochet and tat, or trim a doll's hat?
Take his clumsy thump-measure—now answer me that.

Oh, women, whose days are made radiant with praise,
Whose trumpets are blown on the high and by-ways,
Pray stifle your scorn for a woman forlorn,
Who is driven to sounding her own little horn.

—"Educational Review."

IN THE Republic of Mexico there are now about 22,000 miles of telegraph lines in operation, including the new lines constructed since last April. There are now over 6600 miles of railroad in Mexico, about 124 miles having been constructed since last April.

Best Cure For

All disorders of the Throat and Lungs is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It has no equal as a cough-cure.

Bronchitis

"When I was a boy, I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character, that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary remedies, but recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and one bottle cured me. For the last fifteen years, I have used this preparation with good effect whenever I take a bad cold, and I know of numbers of people who keep it in the house all the time, not considering it safe to be without it."—J. C. Woodson, P. M., Forest Hill, W. Va.

Cough

"For more than twenty-five years, I was a sufferer from lung trouble, attended with coughing so severe at times as to cause hemorrhage, the paroxysms frequently lasting three or four hours. I was induced to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and after taking four bottles, was thoroughly cured."—Franz Hoffman, Clay Centre, Kans.

La Grippe

"Last spring I was taken down with la grippe. At times I was completely prostrated, and so difficult was my breathing that my breast seemed as if confined in an iron cage. I procured a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and no sooner had I began taking it than relief followed. I could not believe that the effect would be so rapid and the cure so complete."—W. H.
