Big Cut in Prices.

DO YOU ever stop to think that we can sell the same goods for less profit than our competitors? Why, because our expenses are so much less. We figure this way: Suppose our expenses are $200, that of our competitors $600. We can sell same goods on a profit of 8 per cent. while they, to even things up, would be compelled to sell their goods at a profit of at least 24 per cent. It is unreasonable to ask them to sell at our prices. People come here expecting to buy cheaper than they can elsewhere. Well, we won't disappoint you; we must keep our reputation up for low prices and square dealing.

Winter Roses.

Take a deep snowdrift and three little boys,
Mix them together with laughing and noise,
Rub them, and roll them, and keep them astir
And very well heated with woolen and fur—
Then six little cheeks and three little noses
Will bloom in the snowdrift like midsummer roses.

PRETTY BETTY MARTIN.

A Maryland Belle Who Gave Rise to a Couplet—She was the Grandmother of Governor Paca and has Descendants in Kent County—Her Daintiness and Fastidiousness—Her History.

In one of the glass cases under the dome of the Government building at the Chicago exposition is exhibited, among old relics, a gold ring with an amethyst setting, to which is attached the following inscription: "This ring belonged to Betty Martin, the grandmother of Gov. Paca, of Maryland, loaned by F. C. Morgan."

This ring has doubtless been seen and the inscription read by thousands of visitors to the exposition without exciting the slighest interest. But the Maryland dame upon whose shapely hand this ring was once worn was a famous belle and beauty, whose admirers were counted by scores in both England and her colonies in ante-revolutionary days, and whose history is of such pleasant memory as should not be forgotten.

Perhaps one-third of the persons who have read and quoted the traditional couplet:

Pretty Betty Martin, tip-toe fine,
Couldn't find a husband to suit her mind,

are fully persuaded in their own minds that the said Betty Martin is a mythe, a fictitious character, to be relegated to the society of the old woman who swept the cobwebs out of the sky, or the respected dame who, with her numerous and perplexing family, inhabited the historic shoe. She has, doubtless, been regarded as the type of excessive and morbid fastidiousness, who so exaggerates defect as to leave all excellence unappreciated.

She has been cited for generations as an admonition to young ladies who are esteemed by their guardians and matrimonial advisers as too "choice" in the selection of a husband, and a warning to those candidates for matrimony who are rapidly approaching the borderland which trenches so closely upon the desolate and frozen plains of old maidenhood. And yet Betty Martin was no mythe, no ideal of feminine capriciousness or wayward or shortsighted procrastination, but a woman of flesh and blood, who not only found one husband to suit her mind, but was wooed and married a second time, and her descendants at this day form a numerous and influential family connection in Maryland and Virginia, while a few have emigrated to the States of Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Texas and California.

She lived to the advanced age of one hundred and ten years, was able to walk about the house the day before her death, and up to her last hour of life retained such brilliancy of eye and freshness of complexion as to confirm all the traditions concerning the extraordinary beauty of her youth.

Five generations of her descendants sat at the table with her during the last week of her life, and upon the very day upon which she breathed her last a grandson of the sixth generation, Dr. William Middlemore Dallam, was born. A brother of the Duke, of Marlborough married a Mrs. Smith, who had an only son, William Smith, whom the stepfather took under his special care. He sent him on a visit to America, where he remained for some years, after which he returned to England. After a short sojourn in the mother country he again took passage for America, and, by a remarkable coincidence, Betty Martin and Richard Dallam, two persons with whose destiny he was connected, embarked at the same time and on the same vessel.

The parents of Betty Martin made their new home in Maryland, where they already possessed large tracts of land. William Smith owned "Blenheim," and Richard Dallam, "The Cranberry," two of the handsomest estates in the new country. For years the beautiful Betty was a reigning belle; and such constant and diminished homage and admiration did her beauty compel, and so numerous were rejections of suitors from both the old and new country, that the well-known couplet is said to have originated with a devoted and persistent, but disappointed admirer, "who loved not wisely, but too well." The successful wooer at last appeared in the person of Richard Dallam.

Two distinguished grandsons of this union were Gov. Paca, of Maryland, and Gov. Caswell, of North Carolina. After the death of Richard Dallam, his widow still surpassingly beautiful, accepted the hand of William Smith, of "Blenheim," a suitor who had loved her before her first marriage, and whose loyal heart never swerved from the allegience of its first love.

At the death of her second husband, William Smith, the estate of "Blenheim," an entailed property, passed to the oldest son, William Smith, and the widow returned to "The Cranberry," the Dallam home stead, where she died in 1778. Among her descendants of the seventh generation are Judge Henry Clay Dallam and John Paca Dallam, of Baltimore.—The St. Paul Globe.

Mrs. Joseph Rasin, of Kent county, is four times removed from "The Pretty Betty Martin" referred to above, in direct line of descent. Miss Anna Rasin, who has spent the past winter in Baltimore city, is a member of the society known as the "Daughters of the Revolution" and wrote an intensily interesting historical article for the society several weeks ago.

The Mechanism of a Blush.

Do you know how you blush? The capillaries which connect the veins and arteries form, particularly over the cheeks, a network so fine that a microscope is necessary to reveal them. Ordinarily the blood passes through these vessels in normal volume, leaving the natural complexion. A sudden emotion, hower, increases the action of the heart, and the blood is forced through the veins in greater volume. This is a blush.—New York World.

There's music in the balmy breeze—
Sweet melodies for all,
To some it sings of buds and bees,
To others of base-ball.

THE man who waits for fortune's wheel,
To seek him for a winner,
Is sure to run down at the heel—
And faint from lack of dinner.

MRS. FOSTER, widow of General John A. Foster, devotes her time in a peculiar form of philanthropy. She visits police courts and prisons to help and comfort unfortunate women who justly or unjustly get entangled in the law.

THE widow of Senator Hearst carries a life insurance of $400,000.

OUR LITERARY FRIENDS.

Brain-Talk for Lovers of Literary Good Things.

"The Story of the World's Parliament of Religions" is told by Rev. F. Herbert Stead in the Review of Reviews for March. Mr. Stead groups together the significant utterances of various representatives who took part in the proceedings of the World's Parliament of Religions, some of which throw a new light upon the faiths and beliefs of Eastern Europe and Asia. The nature and value of the article is suggested by the following subheads: "What Idol Worship Means," "Hinduism Based on Revelation," "No Polytheism in India," "The Bane of India," "Essentials of Hindu Faith," "Buddha's Four Noble Truths," "The Jains Not Atheists," "Confucian Ethics" and the "Shinto's Scheme for Ending War."

The North American Review has seldom offered its readers so great a variety of subjects as will appear in the number for February, nor has it ever presented to them a more remarkable list of contributors.

The Review for March, as usual, gave a magnificent array of varied subjects strongly treated. The opening article, of the March number, which is entitled "The House of Representatives and the House of Commons," is certain to attract considerable attention on both sides of the Atlantic. It is by the Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Hilary A. Herbert, whose long service in the popular branch of Congress makes him peculiarly qualified to discuss the question from the American point of view. Governor Greenhalge, of Massachusetts, answers the objections that have been made to his proposal for holding an informal "Conference of New England Governors," and the United States Commissioner of Navigation, Hon. Eugene Tyler Chamberlain, contributes an able article entitled "A Present Chance for American Shipping."

Harper's for April will anticipate the next naval battle by describing a supposed duel at sea between two armored cruisers of the first class. The article is written by Lieutenant S. A. Staunton, of the United States Navy, and is amply illustrated by Mr. R. F. Zogbaum.

The Easter Number of Harper's Bazar, published March 17th, contained three complete short stories: "A Distinction and a Difference," by Marion Harland, illustrated by L. W. Hitchcock; "Easter Hats," by Kate Upson Clark, illustrated by W. H. Hyde; and "A Disdainful Youth," by Eva Wilder McGlasson. Among the sketches and essays were "Comradeship in Marriage," by Junius Henri Browne, and "The Care of the Aged," by Helen Everston Smith. The suggestions for Easter, furnished by various popular writers, are unusually attractive.

Among other interesting features were: NEW YORK FASHIONS:—Easter Bonnets.—Jackets and Capes.—For Brides and Bridemaids; Early Spring Costumes, illustrated; A Worth Evening Gown, with front-page illustration; Paris Gowns, illustrated; House and Street Costumes, illustrated; Calling and Reception Gowns, illustrated; Reception Toilettes, illustrated; Spring Tailor Gowns and Coats, illustrated; Incroyable Bow, illustrated; Spring Hats and Bonnets, illustrated.

INTERESTING ARTICLES:—Easter-lilies, a poem, by Virginia Van de Water, illustrated; Comradeship in Marriage, by Junius Henri Browne; An Easter Vacation, by Roberta F. Watterson; A Plain Duty; A New Era in Piano Study, by Clara Maynard Parker; Types of Girlhood; Easter Bells, a poem, by Elizabeth Chisholm; A Dainty Easter Gift, by Tillie Roome Littell, illustrated; The Gay Season; Some Easter Entertainments, etc., and a splendid array of other delightful features. The Bazar is always a delightful home visitor.

BIG PRICES FOR STAMPS.

A Five-cent Livingstone, Alabama, on the Original Envelope Brings $576.

The latter-day stamp collectors of Chestertown may possibly find little present encouragement from the result of a stamp sale in New York last week, but for the veterans at stamp-collecting the result may be of a more flattering nature. Postmaster Hiram Brown has a large and magnificent collection, many of which are already very valuable. Mr. Brown has his stamps arranged in chronological order in a handsome album, and has, it were safe to say, by far the most extensive and valuable collection in the county. He has been an ardent collector for years, and now guards his treasures with as much care as a miser would his gold. Of the sale referred to the New York Sun says:

There was a sale of stamps from the collections of William F. E. Gurley, of Springfield, Ill., and others. Some United States department stamps brought good prices. A two-cent navy "error" printed in green sold for $8, a $20 State department, unused, brought $31, and a $500 revenue stamp, $72.50.

A fine lot of Confederate provisionals on the original envelopes sold well. The gem of the collection was a five-cent Livingstone, Ala., on the original envelope. On this the bidding started at $80, and was very lively, the prize being knocked down at $576.

Two Macon, Ga., stamps, five-cent, black on yellow, brought $36 each. They were on the original envelopes. The five-cent Macon, with plain frame, on the original envelope, brought the high price of $102.
