Big Cut in Prices.

DO YOU ever stop to think that we can sell the same goods for less profit than our competitors? Why, because our expenses are so much less. We figure this way: Suppose our expenses are $200, that of our competitors $600. We can sell same goods on a profit of 8 per cent. while they, to even things up, would be compelled to sell their goods at a profit of at least 24 per cent. It is unreasonable to ask them to sell at our prices. People come here expecting to buy cheaper than they can elsewhere. Will, we won't disappoint you; we must keep our reputation up for low prices and square dealing.

GENL. NEAL DOW.

His Noble Efforts in Suppressing Intemperance, Read at the Anniversary of I. O. G. T. at Still Pond, March 19, by Templar C. B. Krusen.

If Frances Willard ever gets old, and she may somewhere late in the coming century, methinks she will be known as Mother Thoughtful, for it is at her suggestion that the temperance sentiment and temperance activities of many lands have agreed to honor the ninetieth birthday of Maine's grand old man. Is it possible to measure Neal Dow's work as we measure his years? We think not. He has started waves of influence that will roll on and on and on while time endures. His achievement was a miracle of thought and a miracle of action. When the rumseller flaunted a license in his face, saying he had authority to pursue the work of death and destruction, and thereby get his living, Mr. Dow saw in a flash that the legal prop must be knocked from under the vile superstructure, and nothing short of that could be called a remedy. With that indomitable courage and admirable skill has he defended his work. The man is not brave, but rash to foolhardiness, that provokes an encounter with his polished lance. May we not hope that the old man, beautiful with his silken, snowy locks, his ruddy cheeks, his lofty, placid brow which age has not dared to wrinkle, will yet see prohibition as the law of the Nation, with Uncle Samuel looking after its enforcement as he does after the laws against smuggling and counterfeiting. As to prohibition in the State of Maine, Mr. Dow was always to be found in the forefront of its every movement. He says that the quantity of liquor now sold in the State is not one-twentieth so great as it was before prohibition. The house he now occupies he built himself and moved into it the day of his marriage. He was born in the house directly opposite, March 20, 1804. Here he spent his childhood with his two sisters, Emma and Harriet, both of whom became active reformers. In the rear of the lot his father, Josiah Dow, a Friend greatly respected by all who knew him, carried on a large tannery. Neal Dow's christian name came from Hannah Neal, his grandmother on his father's side. After receiving an academic education he then served an apprenticeship in his father's tannery and became associate and finally sole proprietor of the establishment. He was always interested in the affairs of the town, and deeply interested in everything that related to its intellectural and moral improvement. From that time to the present day Mr. Dow has been a constant writer for the public press, at first writing on different topics, but later more especially in behalf of the temperance cause. The Washingtonian Journal was published by Shirley & Son during the forties, and I doubt if a number was issued without a communication from the pen of Mr. Dow. He was secretary of the Portland Temperance Society and always one of its managers. In 1833 he was secretary of the Cumberland County Temperance Society, and at all the meetings of the Maine State Unions he was a delegate and took part in the debates, and from time to time, as an opening offered, went before the Legislature and urged the enactment of a prohibitory law. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1858-9, and in 1851 and 1855, the mayor of Portland. For many years he was instrumental in circulating petitions to the Legislature for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating drinks, and on the 30th of May, 1851, while mayor, he went before a committee of the Legislature with the bill for the suppression of drinking houses and tippling shops. He spoke for an hour in Representative Hall before a crowded house, and the committee voted unanimously to report the bill without any alteration. It passed the House by a vote of 86 to 40, and the Senate by 18 to 10, and was signed by the governor on June 2d, 1851. This was the original famous Maine law. Such was the beneficial influence of this law in Maine, that other states followed the example and had it not been for the crowds of foreigners constantly rushing in upon us, possessing drinking habits and easily made voters, and large sums invested in distilleries and breweries by foreign capital, the law would most likely have been enacted in every State in the Union. In 1885 Mr. Dow was instrumental in having the principle of prohibition put into the constitution of the State by the majority of 47,075 votes, the affirmative being three times larger than the negative. He visited England three times and delivered about five hundred addresses under the auspices of the United Kingdom Alliance. He was the candidate for president on the prohibition ticket in 1880. In 1861 he recruited a regiment, the 13th Maine volunteers and a battery of artillery, and was made brigadier-general by President Lincoln in April, 1862. He was twice wounded, was captured and was sent to Libby prison for eight and one-half month, and was then exchanged for Fitz Hugh Lee. The visitor to Libby prison, now in Chicago, will find a brass tablet with Mr. Dow's name on it, in one corner in the third-story, which marks the spot where he was so long confined. In 1826 Mr. Dow was the secretary of the Portland Debating Society and took an active part in the discussions of that organization. He was one of the proprietors of the Portland Athaneum, which had among its members the noblest and best citizens of the town. In 1849 and later, Mr. Dow was one of the directors of the Androscoggin & Kennebeck R. R. Company which was consolidated into the Maine Central, now under control of that prince of R. R. managers, Payson Tucker, Esq. He was one of the directors of the Portland Gaslight Company, and at one time its president. He was for many years one of the directors of the Manufacturers' & Traders' Bank, and was for many years a member of the school committee, and built two or more school houses. He early entered the fire department, and in 1827 was elected captain of the Deluge Fire Company. Afterwards he became chief engineer of the department. He held that office for five or six years. Courageous, muscular, active, possessing great executive ability, with prompt decision, he was eminently fitted for the position. He possessed just those qualities that made him respected by and popular among the firemen. As his time became more and more occupied in the temperance cause, its enemies sought every occasion to injure him, but without success, for he is still leading the movement which enlisted the strength of his youth. Since two generations ago when he put his hands to the plow, he has not looked back. Whoever else has faltered, he has not wearied in well doing. Never understanding the magnitude of the task before him, no success has elated and no reverse has discouraged him. For this reform, at the age of ninety years he is laboring with a hope and enthusiasm worthy of youth; the determination of nature, life and the earnest conviction and calm faith of a ripe old age. But far down the western slope of life, he is looking with unwavering eye and treading with unfaltering step to the close which he knows is not far off, when he may say, I have fought, a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith.

A Perfect Oyster Omelette.

An oyster omelette is very appetizing, but few succeed with it.

Allow a dozen large oysters to half as many eggs. Beat yolks and whites separately and to the yolks add a teaspoonful of minced parsley, four tablespoonfuls of milk, and one of flour, with pepper and salt to taste; beat into them also one tablespoonful of melted butter.

Have your pan—a large one for such an omelette—very hot, and put into it two tablespoonfuls of butter to heat, but not too hot. To insure success the oysters should first be draised and dried and then fried a light brown in a little very hot butter, then set aside in a hot place until the eggs are ready.

When the pan is just right beat the whites into the yolks vigorously, pour the eggs into the pan and keep it over an even but not fierce heat. Detach the edges constantly and when the omelette is set, put the hot oysters in the centre and fold over; dish and serve just as soon as possible. Plates for omelette should always be heated.

Failures in oyster omelettes come because directions too often say nothing of draining, drying and frying the oysters. They are frequently stirred, cold, and wet into the eggs. Their juice stews out and nearly always causes the omelette, despite care in cooking, to become heavy and even to "whey." Although they may be chopped fine the addition of raw oysters is generally found to be disastrous.

A Difference in Pockets.

One of the ways of telling whether a man is a married man or not is to examine his pockets. In the pockets of a bachelor you will find:

Half a dozen letters from girls.

A tailor's bill.

Three or four old checks for theatre seats.

Bills for supper.

Theatrical-looking photographs.

A lot of invitations for dances, dinners and receptions.

A tiny glove scented with violet.

But the married man's pockets will contain:

An old bill.

A couple of unposted letters which were given to him to post a week past.

A sample of an impossible shade which he must match.

A newspaper clipping telling a sure cure for croup.

A shopping list, ranging from a box of blacking to three yards of lace.

Bills.

More bills!

Baby's Profession.

A Parisian stroller has picked up the following particulars of a conversation which passed in an emigrant office recently:

The father of a family presents himself and asks for tickets.

"How many are you?" asks the agent.

"Three—I, my wife, and my child."

"Good; your age, your profession."

"Thirty years, carpenter; my wife, 24, needle-woman."

"The boy?" asked the agent.

"Seven months."

"His profession?"

The father's eyebrows formed gothic arches on his forehead.

"His profession, I say?" repeated the agent angrily. "We have no time to lose here."

The father reflects and at last replies:

"Bachelor."

A Few Riddles.

How is it you can never get rid of a housemaid? Because even when she is dead she returns to dust.

What proof have we that there was sewing in the time of David? We read that he was hemmed in on every side.

I went to India, and stopped there; I came back because I never went there? A clock or watch.

When is a schoolboy like a stamp? When he is licked and put in the corner to make him stick to his letters.

Why is blind man's buff like sympathy? Because its a fellow feeling for a fellow creature.

To what color does a flogging change a boy? It makes him yell O!

What is it that you must keep after you have given it to another? Your word.—London Lady.

A Large Waist

Is not generally considered a necessary adjunct to the grace, beauty or symmetry of the womanly form. Within the body, however, is a great waste made necessary according to the condition of things—continually in process and requiring the perfect action of all bodily functions to absorb or dispel the refuse. When there is irregularity or inaction, ladies who value a clean, pure, healthy body will take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—the only remedy for woman sold with a positive guarantee to right all her peculiar wrongs.

To those about to become mothers, it is a priceless boon, for it lessens the pains and perils of childbirth, shortens labor, promotes an abundant secretion of nourishment for the child and shortens the period of confinement.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure biliousness, constipation, sick headache, indigestion, or dyspepsia, and kindred diseases.
