ANOTHER

Big Cut in Prices.

DO YOU ever stop to think that we can sell the same goods for less profit than our competitors? Why, because our expenses are so much less. We figure this way: Suppose our expenses are $200, that of our competitors $600. We can sell same goods on a profit of 5 per cent. while they, to even things up, would be compelled to sell their goods at a profit of at least 24 per cent. It is unreasonable to ask them to sell at our prices. People come here expecting to buy cheaper than they can elsewhere. Well, we won't disappoint you; we must keep our reputation up for low prices and quare dealing.

GOD.

What giveth its taste to the cucumber?
What bestoweth perfume on the heliotrope?
What with beauty endoweth the maiden?
What with stars doth enjewel the midnight?
What food groweth in the beards of the wheat?

Say Nature, Evolution, what you will,
But how much simpler is the grand word, God!

EDWARD S. CREAMER.

A WINTER VISIT TO HAVANA.

An Interesting Account of Cuba—Bull-fights, Etc.

There is no doubt that tourists who leave the biting cold and frost of the north in search of a soft and balmy climate, will be well content with a visit to this beautiful city. Let them not be too well-assured, however, that as they reach the southern seas they will glide on placid waters, where seasickness is unknown and the voyage is a dream of pleasure, though the guide-book, "which ne'er did lie, though folks at home condemn 'em," tells us so. It is true, the sea air is delightful, and so warm that one can sit comfortably without wraps, on the decks in January, yet during the three days of our trip from Southern Florida, we suffered every pang of that terrible and indescribable feeling which the Cuban calls "Marea," and we call seasickness.

The approach to the harbor of Havana is beautiful and interesting. The bay is one of the finest in the world, and the city is situated on a tongue of land, and is protected by an old stone fort called "Morro Castle" and the heights of "La Cabana." Havana is a very important port, and at all times the harbor is dotted with ships from all parts of the world.

Spain seems to realize the importance of her possession, and also the disposition of the Cubans to free themselves from her yoke, for you always find several Spanish men of war in the harbor, and you meet Spanish officers and marines in the streets.

It is strange that Cubans seemingly make so little effort to encourage their commercial interests, but their laws and harbor regulations seem rather to discourage them. Several years ago no vessel was allowed to enter or leave the harbor after sundown or before sunrise, and now the rates of pilotage make it almost prohibitory, and the custom house officers are so strict in the performance of their duties that any little clerical error in the vessel's manifest, renders it liable to a very heavy fine. In the very centre of the harbor, just peering above the water, is the hulk of an old iron vessel, sunk several years ago, and as there seems to be no disposition on the part of any one to remove this obstruction, it will probably remain, until, in the lapse of time, it will rust away. The steamers seldom land at the wharf, but are moored out in the stream and the passengers are carried ashore in little boats.

As soon as the vessel passes quarantine, and all other preliminaries are gone through with, she is immediately surrounded by lighters or "lanchas" with their crews of "lancheros," who begin to take out the cargo. These men present a picturesque appearance with their sailor suits and caps, and although their facilities are limited, certainly work with a rapidity equal to the "stevedores" of this country. They truly "work while they work," but when the work is done, it is interesting with what abandonment they throw all thoughts of it aside, and as soon as the "fandango" is struck up, every lithe, active limb is moving in unison to the music.

Persons who have spent their winters in Florida will find that a visit to Cuba, is a new and delightful experience. The vegetation is altogether different, the tall, clean, straight pines of the Southern States giving place to palms, laurels and evergreens. The first drive through the city is full of interest. There is always a "coche de plaza" at hand, and although the "cocheros" are not so importunate as in the American cities, the great abundance of these vehicles makes it almost a natural move to take one. The streets are very narrow, particularly in the older parts of the city, probably so designed in order to avoid the intense heat of the sun. There is much to excite your interest, as the stores and houses are open to public view. The houses, which are low, flat structures, are built almost universally of "predra muerta" or deadstone. This stone has naturally a yellow hue, but some are painted and adorned in variegated colors. It is quite pretty when new, but as it becomes old it begins to turn black. The entrance to the house is through a court, which, with the wealthy, is very beautiful. The floors are of marble, and they are adorned with palms and flowers, statues and fountains, and are peculiarly suited to this climate, as on the warmest day they are a refuge from the heat.

Havana has a population of about 300,000. The Spanish element predominates, but it is of a very cosmopolitan character. It is surprising to see the great numbers of Chinese, not engaged alone in the laundry business, as in this country, but they are cigar makers, stevedores, venders of candies and in every other conceivable pursuit. Havana, through its intimate connection with the United States, is greatly Americanized. The American style of dress is largely worn, and it is not unusual to meet some one on the street who speaks English.

The Cuban youth and "senorita" travel extensively, are educated abroad, and frequently spend their winters in Paris and New York. Through their close intercourse with their mother country, Spain, their language remains pure and unadulterated by localisms, which are very common in many cities in Mexico. The only noticable difference between the pronunciation of the Spanish in Cuba and Spain is in the letters c and z. The Cubans pronounce c and z like s before the vowels e and i, while in the pure Castillian they are like th. A person who has studied Spanish a year or two under a professor, or by the several systems used for studying it alone, will be convinced that he knows little of the language when he finds himself in the cities of Mexico and Cuba. It takes considerable time to accustom yourself to the rapidity with which they speak, and while the native readily comprehends your meaning when you speak to him, his reply to you is frequently confusing in the extreme.

In the hotels which make a special effort for American patronage, you see on their letterheads, "A qui se habla ingles," but although the clerks at the office speak English, yet the American finds the waiters at the tables sadly deficient in this respect, and often after an ineffectual effort to make your wants known, you get the reply from them, with a shrug of their shoulders, "No habla ingles."

Experience in a country like this convinces one that the old methods of teaching and studying the language by beginning with a lot of rules and exceptions, and compelling you to learn a long list of irregular verbs, or storing up in the memory a collection of nouns, is not only tiresome and confusing, but almost useless as a practical method.

On going aboard a steamer, or if you find yourself in a cafe, knowing all the rules of grammar will be of little value in asking for a round trip ticket or a glass of wine.

The visitor should early endeavor to learn the value of Spanish money, particularly if he deal with fruit stands and other venders along the streets, as they are much disposed to take advantage of the foreigners, and to add to the already enormous high prices. American money is readily received although they do not allow you any premium.

The Cuban does not deserve the reputation of being lazy, in fact he seems to be working the greater part of the time.

"Calle Obispo," the principal shopping street of Havanna, presents the same busy appearance on Sunday as at any other time and the offices and wholesale houses seem always to be open. They allow themselves little rest, for when their work is over they enter into every excess of pleasure and doubtless this partly accounts for the fact that they grow old and wrinkled so early in life.

The bull-fight seems to be the favorite form of amusement. The Cuban inherits this taste from his Spanish ancestors, and the bull-fight has grown to be a national affair. On every Saturday placards are distributed announcing the coming "corrida" (bull-fight). The bulls and bull-fighters are always imported from Spain for the occasion. The matador is the principal actor in the tragedy, the picadoes and the banderilleros are minor characters and carry spears and flags of flaming red to irritate the bull and excite him to the fight. The theatre for this performance is called "Plaza de Lorros," and it is a novel sight to see "Cuadrilla" of bull fighters gaily dressed, enter the arena amidst the enthusiastic cheers of the crowd, who seem not to regard the probable tragedy which is to be enacted. It is seldom that the men are killed, but anyone can realize the seriousness of this brutal sport, when in one exhibition twenty-two horses were gored to death and dragged out of the ring as a result of the day's sport, and on another occasion two men were sacrificed for the gratification of the lovers of this barberous form of amusement. To the bull, death is inevitable, and he seems to realize it as he rushes with mad fury at one and then at another of his tormentors, and he often leaves sad havor behind him ere the lance pierces his heart and he falls bleeding to the ground. The matador is expected to thrust him through the heart without touching his lungs. If he accomplish this he receives a perfect ovation from the crowd. The animal is then dragged around the arena by four dashing horses, gaily decorated, amidst cheers and acclamations.

The fights always occur on Sunday, and although Americans are frequently drawn to them by curiosity, they seldom develop any fondness for the sport.

PLANTING TREES.

Writes an interesting correspondent to an exchange: "I beg you will lend the rhyme of the poet to the pleading of your argument. How exquisitely has Lowell portrayed the inducements to tree planting in the following lines:

Who does his duty is a question
Too complex to be solved by me.
But he, I venture the suggestion,
Does part of his that plants a tree.

For after he is dead and buried
And epitaphed and well forgot,
Nay, even his shade by Charon ferried,
To—let us not inquire to what.

His deed, its author long outliving,
By Nature's mother-care increased,
Shall stand, his verdant almoner, giving
A kindly dole to man and beast.

The wayfarer, at noon reposing,
Shall bless its shadow on the grass,
Or sheep beneath it huddle, dozing
Until the thundergust o'erpass.

The owl, belated in his plundering,
Shall here await the friendly night,
Blinking whene'er he wakes and wondering
What fool it was invented light.

Hither the busy birds shall flutter,
With the light timber for their nests,
And, pausing from their labor, utter
The morning sunshine in their breasts.

What though his memory shall have vanished,
Since the good he did survives!
It is not wholly to be banished,
Thus to be part of many lives.

In some countries there is a tacit recognition of a public right in the usufruct of planted trees. The wayfarer is permitted to gather whatever fruitage he may find in the orchards or groves by the roadside with which to sate his appetite. The public ways in Spain are lined with trees bearing fruit, the pleasant custom being, after eating, to plant the seeds and to trim and care for the hedgerow nurslings. It is better to plant a seed than to utter a grateful prayer for Nature's kindly dole. The seed may be turned into a perpetual thank-offering, involving the idea of payment for benefit conferred as well as of gratitude to the giver.

She broke her heart—
So it is said;
Jack got a part,
And so did Ned. —The Midget.

She walked along the thoroughfare,
The wind she heeded not;
For its embrace she was prepared,
Her dress was filled with shot.
—Indianapolis Sentinel.

When she and I a-sleighing went,
Though no foot warmer furnished heat,
Her little toes were quite content,
For my warm heart lay at her feet.

Mothers.

"One mother is worth a hundred schoolmasters," said George Herbert. Men are what their mothers make them. But if the mothers are peevish and irritable, through irregularities, "female weakness," and kindred ailments, they find no pleasure, no beauty in the care of their babes. All effort is torture. Let all such who feel weighed to the earth with "weaknesses" peculiar to their sex, try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. They will find the little ones a delight instead of a torment.

To those about to become mothers it is a priceless boon. It lessens the pains and perils of childbirth, shortens labor and promotes the secretion of an abundance of nourishment for the child.

The new pastor of a country church said to one of his Deacons: "I find that Brother Linkum has very liberal religious views." "Yes," replied the Deacon, "Brother Linkum is more liberal in his views than in his contributions."

Mrs. Hojock—"My last millinery bill made my husband sweat." Mrs. Tomdick—"It caused purse-piration, did it?"

A teakettle can sing when it is merely filled with water. But man, proud man, is no teakettle.
