NEW FOWL DIET SEEN AS AID

An extensive research program in developing better balanced diets for Maryland flocks of chickens and turkeys is being carried on by the poultry department of the University of Maryland.

If the consumption of feed can be cut by as little as 5 per cent, a saving of $1,000,000 annually to Maryland poultrymen is possible, said Dr. Morley A. Jull, head of the poultry department.

The feed cost represents about 60 per cent of the total cost of producing eggs and poultry meat, he pointed out.

Approximately 35,000 farmers andcommercial poultrymen stand to profit if the cost of feeding their flocks can be reduced, thus making for greater economy in production.

Maryland poultrymen last year fed over $20,000,000 worth of feed in producing 20,000,000 broilers, 7,000,000 farm - raised chickens, 4,000,000 laying hens and some 350,000 turkeys for breeding and marketing as meat.

A newly discovered B-vitamin called folic acid produced faster growth and more efficient utilization of feed than ordinary mashes, tests conducted by Dr. George N. Briggs, poultry nutrition specialist, showed.

Another B-vitamin, nicotinic acid, was found by Dr. Briggs to be necessary in the diet of laying hens to sustain production, hatchability and maintenance of body weight of layers.

"The level of nicotinic acid required by growing chickens, laying hens and turkeys is influenced," he explained his tests indicated, "by the amount of a substance called tryptophane in the diet and the presence of excessive amounts of proteins that are deficient in tryptophane.

"Chickens fed a practical ration to which was added proteins low in tryptophane suffered from nicotinic acid deficiency," he reported.

Tryptophane, he explained, is one of the amino acids, "which are the building blocks from which proteins are made. In diets containing no nuicotine acids, tryptophane fed in sufficient quantities resulted in increased growth and the complete absence of slipped tendons in the hocks of chickens.

"Because of the relative importance of proteins and vitamins in promoting growth, egg production and health in poultry, the results of these experiments," said Dr. Morley, "are of extreme interest to Maryland feed manufacturing concerns as well as to poultry producers.

"One certain way to reduce the feed bill is to feed chickens and turkeys better diets — diets that will promote more rapid growth in broilers and turkeys and stimulate higher production in layers.

"The bulk of the diet of chickens and turkeys is made up of cereal grains and their by-products. They consist largely of carbohydrates, which supply energy.

"Flocks need more than energy-production nutrients. They need proteins for eggs and flesh production and vitamins to maintain them in good health and to enable the other nutrients to be utilized most efficiently," Dr. Morley said.

THE MARYLAND FARM BUREAU WOOL POOL

The Maryland Farm Bureau Wool Pool, Inc., can handle your wool this year on a consigned basis. The back of Congressional action on legislation supporting the price of wool prohibits us from stating the amount of the advance, however, we will pay an advance at collection time and the final payment will be made when the wool clears the Government appraisers. A 2 cent per pound premium will be paid at that time on all wool tied with paper twine.

You get the most out of your product thru the consignment basis. Our collection points are listed below and Mr. Wilbert Smith and I will be there at the time specified.

Eastern Shore Shippers Attention: All Eastern Shore wool will be weighed, graded and handled at Centreville, Md. You will notice the dates for that point are June 23-24. We have made arrangements with the Kent Cooperative, Inc. and the Southern States Easton Service to take wool in at their places on June 23rd in the event it is inconvenient for you to go to Centreville.
