WILLIAM JESTER'S STORY.

He Tells of the Shooting of His Brother and Himself.

William Jester, who was shot by his brother Jesse last week, at Betterton, and who is now at the Maryland Homoeopathic Hotel, is not as dangerously wounded as was at first supposed. The ball, which entered the arm above the elbow, following the bone down, lodged in the wrist and was extracted by Dr. Urie the night of the shooting before Jester left Betterton. The other ball has since been located. It has been found by Dr. Henry P. Chandlee, who made an X-ray examination of the wound, to be lodged behind a bone in the breast.

Jester told the story of the trouble as follows:

"It all occurred over my wife. About six months ago my brother Jesse returned from sea and came to visit me at Betterton. Not long after I had reason to suspect that he was becoming too friendly with my wife and I warned him.

"One night in the latter part of March I advised my brother that the best thing he could do would be to 'take his clothes and go.' But he stayed on at my house until about a month ago, when he got employment at the Chesapeake bath house. He slept in one of the bath rooms on a cot.

"Wednesday evening I went over to the Chesapeake Hotel and out on the back porch I found my wife and my brother hugging and kissing one another. Both ran. I went to the house of my brother Frank and there borrowed a pistol. Then I went to the bath-house. I found Jesse lying on his cot. Drawing my pistol I said to him, 'I'm going to kill you.'

"He jumped up and I fired, the ball striking him in the leg, and I fired again, missing him. By that time he was down on his knees begging me not to kill him. He said I had accused him wrongfully. He then got up and we started together up the road toward the livery stable.

"We intended getting a team and drive to the doctor to have the ball taken out of my brother's leg. Up to this time no one had seen us or heard the shooting.

"About 200 yards up the road we met our brother Frank. I was standing on a small bridge. Jesse was six feet away. All at once he pulled out a revolver and began firing at me. The first shot struck me in the breast and knocked me to the ground. Lying on my back I drew my revolver and snapped it at him twice, but it failed to fire. He fired three more shots, one taking effect in my arm, when my brother Frank wrenched the pistol from him.

"Frank and Jesse then went off together and I got up and walked over to a spring, when Mr. Howard Turner, who heard the firing from the porch of his hotel, came over and took me in his buggy to my home, which was about a quarter of a mile away. Mr. Turner then telephoned for Dr. Urie, who came over and cut the bullet out of my arm.

"I haven't seen my brother since, nor my wife. She sent word by one of the children to know if she could come to see me. I told my daughter to tell her 'No.'

"I don't want a divorce. I think I would rather have something else—I won't say what; you can judge to suit yourself. I am a great man to have satisfaction. I haven't had satisfaction."

William Jester is 50 years old and a native of Delaware. In appearance he is tall and wiry and his blue eyes and weather-beaten face present a pleasing countenance. His wife is 15 years younger than himself, about the same age of his brother Jesse.

Colors the Hen Didn't Like.

The people of Elkhart, Indiana, affirm that whatsoever the defects of hens in general, they have seen one hen which was not color-blind. She and her brood were displayed in a druggist's window, says a dispatch to the Louisville Commercial, as an advertisement for dyes.

The druggist dyed the twenty chickens, some red, some brown, blue, violet, green and yellow. The hen, a big Plymouth Rock, evinced a remarkably violent dislike for the little fellows who wore the red and the brown, and fought them from her with all the vehemence at her command. She regarded the others with varying degrees of favor, and was particularly fond of her violet-hued offspring.

As night came on, and the difference in colors became less noticeable, the hen's antipathy always lessened, and by the time the electric lights were turned on she would have all the twenty snuggled under her wings. Daylight, however, was sure to bring on a renewal of her troubles.

Natural.

Uncle (meeting his niece in the street early in the morning)—"Well, my dear Annie, whence come you so early with such a joyful face?"

Niece—"I came from the dentist."

Uncle—"But one doesn't laugh when coming from a dentist."

"Niece—"Yes; but the dentist was not home."—Fliegende Blaetter.
