OYSTER PIRATES' CLEVER TRICK.

Top Off Their Ill-Gotten Cargoes With Vegetables.

The reorganized State Oyster Navy will have to go to work much earlier than usual this year. The force has little to do generally until September, but the tongers at various places along the Eastern Shore are now taking oysters out of season, destroying the spawn on the rocks and killing the young oysters by the thousand. In the vicinity of White Haven, Wicomico county, the beds are being depleted by these night maurauders.

The oysters taken out of season are mostly sent to Philadelpuia for restaurants and hotels. Petitions have been sent from Wicomico, Somerset and other tidewater counties, to Governor Smith and Commander Howard, asking for increased police psotection.

Some of the piratical tongmen now devasting the oyster beds, came around into Maryland waters from Philadelphia. They top off a cargo of oysters with potatoes, tomatoes or some other vegetable or fruit to conceal identity.

Captain James Fields, of Salisbury, has been appointed pilot on the State steamer Governor Thomas, and to day joined his vessel at Cambridge.

LOVES THE LOST CAUSE.

Mrs Rosenberg Gives $600 Toward Maryland Confederate Monument.

The Daughters of the Confederacy in Maryland recently received the largest individual contribution yet made to the proposed Confederate monument in Baltimore. It was made by Mrs. M. H. Macgill Rosenberg, a former Marylander, but now a resident of Galveston, Texas.

The contribution was for $600, being $100 for each of the following members of her family who served or suffered for the Confederate States:

Dr. Charles Macgill, formerly of Hagerstown, her father.

Dr. C. G. W. Macgill, brother.

Davidge (Pat) Macgill, brother.

James Macgill, brother.

Wm. D. (Barlow) Macgill, brother.

Frank Macgill, brother, who was only 10 years old in 1861, but was imprisoned four times in Hagerstown during the war.

Mrs. Rosenberg has on other occasions testified her affection for Maryland and her lasting attachment to the Confederate cause.

The Lost Cause is not without hosts of loyal men and women who stand ready with a beautiful and uncompromising loyalty to champion it. The cause may be "lost," but it remains consecrated by the life-blood, the tears and the love of a loyal people. The Stars and Bars "as long as the heart has passion, as long as life has woes," will find willing hearts and eloquent lips to defend the righteousness of the cause for which it stood.

When Gen'l Albert D. Shaw, at Atlanta, last week, declared that the flag of the Confederacy should never be displayed on any occasion except at Confederate reunion with an eloquence worthy of the cause and a courage worthy of the great Confederate leader, Gen'l John B. Gordon rushed into the breach. General Gordon said he could not teach his children that he fought for what was wrong. He entered battle for what he believed was right and "only the judgment day and God Himself will ever decide who was right."

"Let us cherish the memories," continued General Gordon, "and history will record and Heaven judge that both sides were right in fighting for that which they believed was right. Let us settle once and for all this question on a basis commensurate with the manhood of the sides engaged in the great struggle; let us settle on a basis of that immaculate truth that both sides were fighting for the Constitution of their forefathers."

The Confederate Banner and the Lost Cause still have a sacred meaning and carry messages of inspiration to thousands of American hearts. In these days of militarism and imperialism, the southern breast turns with a peculiar feeling of pride to the Stars and Bars and their relation to the "Lost Cause."

DR GENESE HAS A GRIEVANCE

Unpleasant Experiences at the Paris Exposition.

Dr. David Genese, the well-known dentist and inventor, has returned from Europe, where he spent about three months, principally at the Paris Exposition. Dr. Genese went abroad last April for the purpose of disposing of some of his inventions and seeing that his exhibit at the Paris Exposition was properly set up. He left Baltimore a widower of 10 years, but while in England, his native country, he married Miss K. E. Howe, of Fulham, who is a granddaughter of Glenny, the famous landscape gardener of England. Dr. and Mrs. Genese arrived in Baltimore on Tuesday of last week. The doctor says he enjoyed his trip very much. His appearance has been somewhat changed by the fact that he has shaved off his luxuriant growth of whiskers which adorned his face for years.

Dr. Genese said the individual exhibitor at the Exposition had rather a hard time to get what he felt were his rights. The doctor went over to put up a machine of his own invention, for which he had taken out a French patent. The French law requires that within two years after the patent has been granted the machine shall be exhibited in perfect working order and shall be inspected by officers of the French courts. If the machine is found to be imperfect the patent is revoked. Being familiar with the French law, to prevent any difficulty Dr. Genese attended to everything himself.

When he left the Exposition about three weeks ago the machine, which was one for compounding chemicals, was in its place among the chemical exhibits. A few days ago he received an anonymous letter, written on July 10, which was as follows:

"It may interest you to learn that your exhibit has been removed from its place and is now stored away in a corner behind the moving stairway along with old boxes and other rubbish. It might as well be at the bottom of the Seine, and if you write to the commission they might for a consideration store it in some old garret for you. A phonograph is now installed in the place formerly occupied by your machine."

Dr. Genese wrote immediately to Paris to Commissioner Capelart of the occurrence, telling the Commissioner that he had complied with every requisite of the Commissioners in putting up his exhibit and that he would hold the Commissioner personally responsible for any loss. The machinery was insured for $2,000.

"Foreigners have had the greatest difficulty in getting their exhibits. The number of exhibitors is so large that it has been difficult to handle all of the stuff. Exhibits were still coming in when I left Paris the last of June. I left because under the French law I could not manufacture some things I needed there, and had to come home to make them. I expect to return later.

"Americans have had a particularly hard time in getting their stuff, and quantities of merchandise have been scattered—due to the poor arrangements for the delivering of packages—for 20 miles around the outskirts of Paris."

In speaking of the expensiveness of the Exposition to the visitor, Dr. Genese said:

"The tipping that is absolutely necessary makes a serious inroad into one's pocketbook. You can't get a glass of anything or a thing to eat without feeing the attendant. The small hotels and boarding houses have nearly doubled their prices. Some of the restaurants that charged certain prices in May had their signs painted over and in June were charging 50 per cent. more than they had done the month before."

Dr. Genese will be remembered as having lived for a portion of several years at Betterton, where he owned a pretty cottage home (Idle While, now belonging to Mr. Supplee), overlooking the Chesapeake.

SUPPOSE BRYAN WERE ELECTED.

[From the Boston Post.]

Suppose Bryan were elected President; what would happen? What sort of a President would we have in him?

In the first place, we should have a thoroughly honest man in the White House. This is a fact conceded by Mr. Bryan's political foes as well as by his political friends. And it is more than the republicans can say of every candidate for President put up by their party. We should have a President of unquestioned ability. Mr. Bryan has shown himself a man of parts. He is not only a brilliant orator, but he has demonstrated his possession of the qualities of statesmanship.

We should have a President who is personally unselfish. Mr. Bryan is devoted to principles rather than to the advancement of his individual interests. He is a broad minded man.

We should have for President a man of tact and good humor. Mr. Bryan would enter the White House without enemies to punish or grudges to satisfy. He carries no "knife."

And touching the policies and issues on which this election turns, we should have a President devoted to the republican as against the imperial theory of government; to the protection of the interests of the great body of the people as against monopolistic cabals.

We should have a President who has pledged himself to what we at the East regarded as a mistaken theory of finance, but who would be unable in the four years of his term to put his theory in practice in any form.

All in all, even from the republican point of view, there have been many candidates, both republican and democratic, whose election to the presidency would be properly regarded with greater apprehension than that of William Jennings Bryan.

MARYLANDERS IN THE REVOLUTION.

The character of the Revolutionary soldiers from Maryland, who went to Massachusetts to join Washington's army, may be seen from the following letter to a gentleman then residing in Philadelphia:

I have had the happiness of seeing Capt. Michael Cresap, marching at the head of a formidable company of men from the mountains and backwoods, painted like Indians, with tomahawks and rifles, dressed in hunting-shirts and moccasins; and although some of them had marched eight hundred miles from the bank of the Ohio, they seemed to walk light and easy.

Their health and vigor declared them, after what they had undergone, to be intimate with danger and familiar with hardship. Many of them exceed six feet in height.

Yesterday they were drawn out to show the gentlemen of Frederiektown their dexterity in shooting. A clapboard, with a mark the size of a dollar, was put up. They began to fire offhand, and few shots went wide of the paper. Then they lay on their backs, some on their breast or side, others ran twenty or thirty steps, and firing, appeared to be equally certain of the mark.

A young man then took the board in his hand, not by the end, but by the side, and while he held it up, his brother walked to the distance and very coolly shot into the white. Then he laid down his rifle, took up the board, and held it as was held before, while the second brother shot at it. By this exercise I was more astonished than pleased.

But will you believe it, when I tell you that one of the men took the board, and placing it between his legs, stood with his back to the tree while another drove the centre?

What would an army of one thousand of these men do in the forests of America: They want nothing to preserve their health and courage but water from a spring, a little parched corn, and what they can easily procure in hunting. Wrapped in their blankets, in the dampest night they need only the shade of a tree for shelter and the earth for a bed.
