ALL HANDS together for the amendment. Kent should give a big majority for it this time.

THIS is good old summer time, and the weather man says we are in for a long hot spell. Nobody said rain, did they?

THERE seems to be general satisfaction throughout the entire county with the Democratic ticket. We have not heard a dissenting voice, and this shows a most healthy candition for the party. It is no use for the Republicans to nominate a ticket. They can't possibly beat a united Democracy.

THE ADDRESS of Cashier W. Bradford Copper, president of the Maryland State Bankers' Association was a splendid effort. It was a hit right from the shoulder at the Baltimore business men in not getting after the Eastern Shore trade, and was extremely timely in its utterances. It will give us pleasure to publish the address in full. Mr. Copper is one of the best bank officials in the State, and his address before the State Bankers created profound interest.

WASHINGTON COLLEGE ALUMNI.

The history of Washington College for the past three or four years has been one of remarkable progress. In every department of the work has there been such advancement as has placed the college in the front rank of the secondary institutions of the East, and the future looks particularly bright for the time-honored institution which has just closed its 127th year. There is one phase of the college's history however, which can be very materially changed for the better, and that is the relation which the alumni of the college sustain to the institution. We regret to state that for sometime past this interest, save in proportionately few instances, has been passive. Only a few of the college's graduates have returned at commencement time to renew old friendships and to enjoy the exercises of their Alma Mater. Whether this non-attendance has been due to a lack of love and sympathy in the welfare of the institution, or whether the features of the programmes have not been a sufficient inducement to occasion a return, is not for us to say. The fact simply remains that scarcely one in five of the alumni of the college ever return to enjoy commencement. Then too, for some reason or other which we are unable to state, the alumni of the college have not been as active in the college's welfare as they might have been. There are exceptions to all rules, and certain individual alumni of the college have taken great interest in its welfare ever since their graduation, and their efforts have borne fruit which the college is enjoying in a large measure today. We speak of the alumni as an association, it is not fulfilling its duty to the college and there should be something done, and done at once to awaken within the heart of every alumnus of the college the spirit of sympathy in its welfare, and interest in its efforts for the uplift of the youth of the land. There are at least 300 alumni of Washington College. That means a power of strength to the institution when properly encouraged and fostered. These men and women are scattered in all parts of the country, and it should be their pride and their pleasure to use their influence to induce others to drink from the same intellectual fountain when they slaked their thirst for knowledge, and every alumnus should feel that he must be present at every commencement. The work that the Alumni Association can do and should do for the college is of vast importance to any institution. They may not only sustain the prestige of their Alma Mater in the land where they have cast their lot, but it is within the province of the association to inaugurate plans and devise means for the material and financial welfare of the college. In other words the Alumni Association of Washington College should begin to do something tangible for the college. The most that it has done in the past is to gather in small numbers around the banqueting board, eat a good repast, enjoy the social intercourse, and repair to their homes to wait for the next reunion. We are letting slip a golden opportunity to do something grand and noble for old Washington. One of the greatest inducements to a return to commencement on the part of every alumnus, is a building where every graduate who returns for commencement, can be entertained at the college, which building can be very easily used for other necessary purposes during the year. The idea of concentration appeals to college-bred boys. They like to get together to rehearse the doings of past years, and with such inducements, we believe that there would be many more returns than now. Such a building known as Alumni Hall, could be built by the Alumni Association of Washington College by yearly subscriptions, and what alumnus of the college has not enough college spirit in him to contribute at least $10 a year for a short term of years? The Alumni Association of the college should be one of the greatest forces in the advancement of the college, and it can be made so if every alumnus of the college feels it his duty to take that interest in its welfare which the college authorities have a right to expect of it. We are prompted to say this because we are an alumnus of the college and because we feel that the Association is not doing the work it should be doing for the welfare of the institution. As alumni, we should get together, plan to do something, and there are numerous instances in which we can be useful to the college, and let us do something to get the graduates to attend commencement in large numbers, let us do something else besides meeting once a year around the banquet board to enjoy a good repast. Let us begin from now to secure for the college the largest enrollment of students in its history, and let us set on foot plans, the accomplishment of which means so much for the material welfare of the college. Let's get together and do something worth while.
