Don't Be Deceived by loud flashy garments that some tailors claim as up-to-date models. Loudness is never the choice of the man who knows or the man who leads the season's styles. Fashionable tailoring is always the embodiment of good taste. For the real nobility of dress, nothing can approach the manly attire that eminates from

Electric Light Company Furnishes Current at 10 Cents a Kilowatt, While Chestertown Pays 20 Cents—The Company in Salisbury Erects Arches and Gives Current, While Chestertown Pays $1200 a Year For Its Street Lights and Has Not an Arc Light In the Town. What Evening Sun Correspondent Says of Salisbury.

Salisbury, Md., Sept. 10.—While Baltimore, with cheap coal, is writhing on the live wire of high electric rates, the citizens of Salisbury are rejoicing in an adequate and satisfactory service at the price of 10 cents a kilowatt—the same price as in Baltimore, it is true, but cheaper under all conditions. But it's a grasping company in Salisbury and demands every ounce of flesh. As, for instance :

Entering the city the other evening the correspondent of The Evening Sun was dazzled by the electric display on Main street and looked to the lampposts for a sign, "Broadway." Reminiscences of the Great White Way flashed over his recollection and he searched for some familiar "lobster palace."

"EXTRAVAGANT TOWN?"

Not only were all the regular street lights lighted and burning brightly, but over the street at frequent intervals were strung arches of bulbs, illuminating the thoroughfare so that one might read fine print without trouble.

"Extravagant town, this; very," he murmured, but consoled himself with the thought that he was not a taxpayer.

Next day he was introduced to W. J. Downing, president of the company which apparently had the town where the hair's short.

"Fine street lights you have here," ventured the scribe, gazing in admiration at the man who could persuade 8,000 intelligent citizens to burn the midnight current at several cents a kilowatt.

"Yes," smiled Mr. Downing, "we believe in light streets. The lights make an impression on the visitor, and a good impression is a mighty fine thing to make. On reaching a dimly lighted town a stranger succumbs to depression; the gloom enshrouds his soul, and he looks for an undertaking establishment. 'Is this a town or a cemetery?' he mutters, and he goes to bed quickly before he gets the horrors.

WELCOME TO STRANGER.

"But in a well-lighted town it is different. The lights seem to welcome the stranger and make him feel really at home. His heart is lightened, and he looks around and takes notice—notices the crowd on the street, the displays in the show windows, the pretty girls in the drug stores absorbing soda water and the general air of prosperity. Instead of 'turning in' he wanders around the thoroughfares and maybe picks up a couple of acquaintances, who tells him about the town and gives him a good idea of its attractions.

"So, we try to keep the streets well lighted and make the stranger feel happy. Just now the arches are not as brilliant as they might be, as we have only 16-candlepower lamps in use; but with [illegible] each arch and
