ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY.

The Remarkable Record of a Unique Institution.

As the result of a nation-wide campaign, the American Sunday School Union which is now preparing to hold its centenial celebration, has established over one hundred and twenty thousand Sunday schools with half a million teachers and more than five million scholars.

The society is also preparing to carry on its work of rural child development on an even broader scale, in an effort to meet the constantly growing demands from many parts of the country.

An intensely interesting series of pamphlets has been issued, describing the various phases of the organization's work and relating some of the amazing experiences of its field workers. These pamphlets may be secured upon request without cost.

Beginning with its first president, Alexander Henry, the society has numbered among its officers and committee members some of the ablest men of America including authors, statesmen, jurists, financiers and merchants. Its headquarters are located at 1816 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Live Stock a Good Farm Asset

"Show me a country without live stock and nine times out of ten you show a country of farmers poor financially, often a country of tenants moving once a year, a country of weedy fence rows, unpainted buildings and poor roads, a country where money is scarce and rates of interest high, a country of declining towns, real estate for sale at a low price and the soil growing poorer," said a well-known agricultural expert.

"This is enumerating a lot of evils but most or all of them are to be found in the absence of livestock.

"Here is the explanation. Such sections invariably drift to the production of one or two crops; they are grown for cash and much depends on them.

"They are so important that all the activities of the farm are directed toward their production and the sad, sad thing about it all and the secret of the failure of crop farming and especially one or two crop farming is that the selling times come only once or twice a year, the farm's force is busy only half the time and eating all the time.

"Selling at long intervals means living on credit between times and the farmer with a system that forces him to buy on credit six months or more of the year is down and out from the day until he changes his system. It matters not what the crop is, whether wheat, hay, apples, strawberries, cantaloups or watermelons, if it is the sole dependence the farming business will sooner or later come to wreck.

"A week spent in a one crop country has brought these truths vividly to mind. Cash crops are all right, rightly managed; they may be a necessity but they are the rocks that have wrecked the agriculture of more than one corner of the United States. Live stock is the safety device known for the tiller of the soil.

"Make live stock the foundation for all operations. Make the farm a factory working winter as well as summer; have livestock and livestock products to sell every month of the year; let cash crops be side lines—then they will be real cash crops—and we enjoy the prosperity of a right system.

A banker who deals with farmers said at a bankers' conference: The farmer who settles on some of the rougher, cheaper lands, keeps good livestock, has pastures and rotates crops, will in ten years have a mortgage on the farm of the man who settles on the level fertile land and goes into the cropping business without livestock."
