OUR POULTRY DEPARTMENT

More Eggs For Each Hen.—This is the one vital subject to all poultry raisers and how to get more is as interesting as the result of Jason's hunt for the golden fleece. Since the inauguration of egg laying contests at the state agricultural experiment stations egg producers have begun to look on with interest. One of the first places to stage a contest of this sort was at Storrs, Connecticut, where Tom Barron's leghorns made such good records for him. No doubt, all these experiments have tended to increase the egg yield by the adoption of new methods, etc. But this subject is as old as the egg business and how to answer it with profit is a matter that deserves some consideration. First, we must have better houses; second, we must have more range-bred birds; third, we must have better feed; and fourth, we must keep our houses more sanitary, and to do it we must give the birds more attention. All these things go to the increasing of our flock's production and if we do not have the time to give our birds the attention their production will suffer accordingly.

What It Costs To Produce Eggs.—There are a great many of our readers who have no idea how much it costs to produce the eggs they bring to the market. If they did they might become disgusted sometimes and quit the business. So it may be just as well that they don't know. In February, 1919, the New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station presented figures showing the costs, returns and profits on selected pens of White Leghorn layers. These pens comprised 50 to 800 pullets each, on 32 different farms. However, the figures presented by the New Jersey Station this year are more comprehensive for records were kept on a number of commercial egg farms, and instead of picking out certain pens the entire plants are included in the report. At the station mentioned in the above the cost per dozen eggs of course varied every month accordingly but the average cost per dozen for a year was about 35 cents. On many farms in Kent, where the birds get a great deal of their feed on range, the cost is much less than this.

The Light Brahma—The light brahma is one chicken whose color has stood the test of time and improved with the years. Originally a grizzled gray mixture with black and an indication of red, the true color of the light brahma, as we now see it in its best form, is black and white, pure and true and without othere color mixtures. This same color type has been transferred to Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes, and less successfully to some other kinds. This color type is impressive because of the strong contrasts of black on white. To speak in generalities, the body color of the light brahma is white against which appears a solid black, lustrous, greenish-black tail and a neck striped with black. This laced neck is one of the crowning glories of the bird, rivaled only by the big black tail coverts edged with white which join the back and tail together. There are very few of the light brahmas in Kent county, but there is no mistake about it, they are pretty birds.

May Have Shore Auto Passenger Line.—There have numerous reports afloat recently regarding an auto passenger line for the Eastern Shore. The proposed line will run from Easton to Elkton. It is stated that a number of capitalists are behind the movement. The identity of the promoters is kept a secret, but a representative has been on the Shore for some time looking into the project. Large trucks carrying over twenty passengers and traveling fast will be put into operation. If the plan matures it would, no doubt, be a good thing for the Eastern Shore.

Bohemia Bridge Collapses.—The large frame bridge which spans the Bohemia river in lower Cecil is closed to travel. For some time past the bridge has not been in good condition, due to the sinking of the pilings on the south end of the structure and on Friday the pilings sank still further, making travel on the bridge dangerous. The closing of the bridge makes it necessary for traveling people to detour at Cecilton across to Warwick and Middletown, Del., in order to reach Elkton. This bridge has been in bad shape for some time and the wonder is that it was not repaired or renewed long ago.
